My hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) could not be present today, but she has told me that she has problems with subsidence in her constituency. Her problems are considerably worse than mine. She has had correspondence with her city council about some houses in Riley avenue in Burslem. The council quoted a classic distinction; apparently because of the length of time that mining has gone on beneath that road, British Coal denies that subsidence damage is attributable to deep mining. It claims that compensation is statute-barred because of the length of time that the mining has continued.

A geological fault runs beneath Riley avenue in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North. The presence of that fault has been known for many years, presumably even before mining commenced. Obviously mining coal from below such a fault is a problem. I have worked beneath geological faults in mines, and I know that faults are very unstable and unpredictable and it is not very nice to work underneath them. Where those faults exist, people are not convinced that long-term mining below a thin crust is satisfactory. I hope that we shall consider the need for flexibility and a re-interpretation with regard to specific cases where compensation claims arise.

I do not want to speak for long because I know that other hon. Members wish to speak. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield would be happy to see local adjudication so that people do not feel that bureaucracy is preventing them from making claims. Ordinary people cannot afford six-figure fees to go to a land tribunal over a dispute.

I received a letter from a constituent of mine in January. Prior to this I had corresponded with him, with the local parish council and British Coal, at area and national level. I have been trying to get some compensation for damage in the village of Woodall near Harthill in the south of my constituency. The letter is from a Mr. H. Taylor who, although only an ordinary resident, has become something of an expert on coal mining subsidence law—or rather the lack of it—over the past three and a half years. Mr. Taylor lives in South Cottage, Woodall. His letter, written in January, gives a brief outline of what happened in his village:

"Six of us, householders in Dowcarr Lane Woodall, applied in the summer of 1986 to British Coal for compensation for subsidence damage to our houses from the Highmoor Drift mine"— which is in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes)—

"the main gallery of which runs under our houses in Dowcarr Lane. We got nowhere. A young technician visited and took a very cursory look and BC"—

that is, British Coal—

said 'No' to our claims. I had used a Subsidence Consultant who was in no doubt about the merits of my claim; he was on the basis of 'No payment, no fee' ".

When British Coal said no, the consultant cleared off, as he could see that there was no money to be made—although payment was made in Mansfield, just half an hour's drive from my constituency.

When their claims were turned down, the residents of Dowcarr lane collectively asked Harthill and Woodall parish councils for help. They also had problems with drainage because the road had tilted—a clear sign that subsidence was most likely to have caused the damage. The tilt was also causing problems in nearby fields.

The borough engineers then went into litigation with British Coal to try to obtain compensation. There has been no outcome so far, although the case has been in progress for a considerable time. Mr. Taylor and many other residents are very upset. They have found that British Coal, while denying any responsibility for problems on the roads and in residents' homes, has been negotiating not only with residents collectively—through me or through the parish council—but with individual residents. It came to the attention of Mr. Taylor and his associates that British Coal has decided, without prejudice—a phrase that is often used—to pay compensation to one of the residents of the village. I hope that I am not misquoting British Coal.

A letter written to the clerk of the council stated—referring to a house on a road in which all the other residents had applied for compensation, individually and collectively—

"this property has suffered recent movement but we are still of the opinion, after taking all factors into account that it is not due to the effects of mining subsidence for which we would have a current liability."

Presumably that is an interpretation of the six-year rule that British Coal now uses. The letter continues:

"Completely without prejudice we are however prepared to investigate the matter further and the claimant has been informed of the action proposed."

Mr. Taylor's letter includes a handwritten note, which reads

"A 7th person claimed when we did and that claim was allowed—because, I think, the claimant could get legal aid and therefore dodge the huge expense of the Land Tribunal (High Court) which would require us to use Solicitors and Barristers, at a cost in the region of ten times the size of our claims."

That sums up the householders' problems. British Coal now appears to be prepared, "without prejudice", to pay some compensation on one house in this small village, but is denying it to all the others.

Dr. Woodcock: I understand that no case settled by the land tribunal has not involved legal aid. No one can afford to risk such high costs without it.

Mr. Barron: That is absolutely right. The irony is that if legal aid is granted a massive amount of public money may be payable. People may have interests to declare. Massive legal expenditure may be paid out of the public purse which, as Mr. Taylor pointed out would be far in excess of the compensation claimed for the damage done to the property. That is nonsense.

British Coal thought that it was helping, but in reality it has made matters worse, in that village. I do not for one moment want British Coal to stop paying compensation to the owner of that house, but many other people are caught in a pincer movement and will have to remortgage their homes if they are to have any chance of obtaining justice.

Mr. Meale: Has my hon. Friend considered another danger facing the coal industry? It does not take a genius to realise that the scale of the claims submitted means that as this country is a member of the European Community someone could take to the European court of Human Rights the right to have his home repaired. If that were to happen, implementation of the court's decision might actually rule out the financial viability of the coal industry.

Mr. Barron: My hon. Friend is right to point that out. I hope that the Government will introduce legislation to sort out the mess before we are forced to obtain judgments from elsewhere.

My constituents in Woodhall are not helped by the absence of any form of independent adjudication in which they and British Coal could have faith. Such a body could decide whether and how much compensation should be granted. The Waddilove report states:

"There is a place for local independent adjudication by persons who have appropriate skills and are drawn from an approved list. The Department of Energy should invite nominations for such a list of adjudicators to be available throughout the coalmining areas."

It then described in detail how that should operate.

One of the most disappointing aspects of the consultation paper put out by the Government in April 1988 was that it did not propose that the legislation would deal with the referral to local adjudication. In those circumstances, how are Mr. Taylor and my constituents to receive any form of justice if they cannot receive some money to allow them to go to the land tribunal to fight their case? That is totally and utterly wrong. Conservative Members have said that in other areas of dispute there are consumer protection organisations and arbitration organisations, as well as Government Departments or Government-sponsored agencies, to which consumers can go for some form of arbitration. Yet the Government say that they are not prepared to bring in local adjudication for this matter.

If the legislation as proposed in April 1988 is brought in before the next general election, I assume that the Minister will be in charge of it and the Opposition will strongly oppose it if it does not contain the Waddilove recommendations. It would be the answer to many people's problems if they could have confidence in a local adjudication system which would decide whether it was mining damage, instead of having to rely on the present arbitrary lottery. Under such a system Members could advise their constituents as to whether they would receive compensation.

Until such time as we can get help to the people who have to live with the environmental excesses of coal mining, we shall continue to argue strongly against what is currently being done. I hope that the Minister can tell us when legislation is to be introduced. He must know that people are not happy about the Government's proposals for legislation.

Mr. Andy Stewart (Sherwood): Today's debate gives hon. Members another opportunity to bring to the attention of the House and the Government the serious and often distressing circumstances that our constituents must endure as a result of damage to their properties from subsidence. I begin by thanking the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) who, knowing at first hand the enormous problems faced by residents of coal mining areas, used his good fortune in winning the ballot for private Members' motions to choose this subject again for debate. The hon. Gentleman may recall that just over a year ago he introduced another important debate on the consequences of subsidence damage.

Some may question the relevance of this debate, but for hon. Members who represent mining areas it is the only way in which we can demonstrate to the Government and to British Coal that the law on subsidence damage must be changed. Under the present regulations British Coal is judge and jury. It decides whether compensation is due and how much it will be, leaving people with two choices —take it or forget it. Since last year's debate, progress on change has been nil, although a constructive meeting was held with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Two important milestones, however, have been reached. First, the united district council authorities, covering north Nottinghamshire and north Derbyshire and working in conjunction with Trent polytechnic, have ascertained the depth of the problem facing people who live in their districts. The hon. Member for Mansfield gave a full account of these activities, and I shall not bore the House with repetition. Suffice it to say that I fully support the endeavours of the united local authorities.

Secondly, the united industry working party has been formed, comprising the Association of British Insurers, the British Property Federation, the Building Societies Association, the CBI, the Country Landowners Association, the Law Society, the National Farmers Union and the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors. Why have these powerful professional organisations come together? That is easily answered: they are incensed by the scandalous behaviour of British Coal in respect of its members' claims for mining subsidence damage. These bodies have pledged to lobby hard and long for national justice to be seen to be done to the affected property owners.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) has asked me to apologise to the hon. Member for Mansfield and the House for his absence today—he has eight long-standing engagements in his constituency. I assure the House that he wholly supports our cause on behalf of his constituents.

Since I was first elected to Parliament more than six years ago I have received more than 2,000 letters from, and a similar number of visits to my surgeries by, constituents complaining about British Coal's attitude to, lack of progress on and outright rejection of their subsidence claims. However, we must also bear in mind that British Coal has satisfactorily settled many claims.

One of the principal problems faced by my constituents is that British Coal has moved the goalposts in Nottinghamshire when it has been in its interests to do so. A prime example of that was the reduction, in 1985, of the time limit for claims to be submitted from 12 to six years. If a claim had been lodged but had not yet been processed, that was my constituent's bad luck. If claimants did not accept British Coal's meagre offer, offers were withdrawn.

That change was brought about after serious financial irregularities were uncovered in British Coal's estates office in Nottinghamshire in 1983-84. As a result of a lack of proper supervision by British Coal of its subsidence inspectors, and in the absence of a proper audit, innocent people were made to suffer. At present, their only redress is the right to appeal to the Lands Tribunal. That system may have been satisfactory when first introduced many years ago, but in recent years the cost of bringing a case has, as was mentioned by the hon. Member for Mansfield, varied between £15,000 and £100,000. That does not give claimants much incentive to rush to justice.

A change to a cheap and simple system of recourse for claimants is long overdue. During last year's debate on the subject, I welcomed the White Paper published in response to the Waddilove report in which the Government made clear their determination to alleviate the hardship and distress suffered by property owners affected by subsidence. Action to implement that ideal is also long overdue.

No one can afford to be complacent—least of all British Coal, as many of its employees live in areas prone to subsidence. The Union of Democratic Mineworkers recognises that substantial claims in any one area could place a colliery in jeopardy. Nevertheless, it believes in the principle of fair and just settlements, not only for its own members but for everyone affected by subsidence.

I share the UDM's view that the cost of providing compensation should be met from a national fund and not be set against individual collieries. The cost of meeting compensation claims adds approximately £1 to every tonne of coal that the industry sells. Although that sum may be small, it can be crucial to a pit's viability when added to its total costs. I was delighted to read in British Coal's annual report that claims charged to collieries dropped substantially, from £245 million in 1983-84 to £50 million last year, particularly bearing in mind that some related to earlier years. British Coal currently has £270 million set aside for latent liabilities arising from subsidence.

How can justice for claimants be ensured? Improvements could be made by adopting five administrative measures. First, British Coal should publish each year in local newspapers a map of sufficient size and detail showing coal workings in that locality for the past 12 months, currently, and for the next 12 months. Secondly, the Department of Energy's guide to claimants' rights should be corrected and rewritten in a more user-friendly style and be made more freely available. British Coal leaflets should be consolidated and should incorporate all extra current statutory concessions. Thirdly, British Coal should provide claimants with a claim form under the Coal Industry Act 1975, a basic summary of the differences in entitlement from those provided in the Coal-Mining (Subsidence) Act 1957, a copy of the Department of the Environment's revised and updated guide to claimants' rights, and a copy of other British Coal leaflets.

Fourthly, British Coal should acknowledge that claims may be submitted within six years of damage occurring. Fifthly, the Department of Energy should establish an independent user group consultative committee review board to monitor the system's operation and to recommend improvements. As the Government's sponsoring Department for coal, the Department itself cannot function independently of that role.

I should also like to suggest to the Minister that there is a need for interim legislative reform. Interim measures could be included in any forthcoming Coal Bill. There could be local arbitration. All disputes in respect of private dwellings and up to £50,000 in respect of other property should, at the election of the claimant, be resolved by a local arbitration panel. As for the standard of repair, British Coal should be under a duty to restore damaged property, so far as is reasonably practicable, to the condition that is was in when the damage occurred. Compensation should be paid for any shortfall in valuation to the pre-damaged condition equivalent to the residential loss of market value.

As for own contractors, a claimant—unless, in all the circumstances, it was unreasonable to do so—should be entitled to employ a contractor of his own choice to make good the damage after preparation of a proper schedule of repair and competitive estimates. After inspection of completed work, or stages, British Coal should pay the cost of the work, including that of any technical or professional assistance, properly incurred by the claimant in respect of the work and for recording the condition of the property at the time of notification. In all disputes as to whether damage resulted from subsidence caused by coal mining the onus should be on British Coal to prove that it is not subsidence damage. These measures will not solve all the existing problems. They should be looked upon only as interim measures until full legislation can be implemented.

The White paper, in response to Waddilove, said that simple arbitration would be available as an alternative. Unfortunately, 18 months after the White Paper was published that is clearly not happening, even though British Coal has accepted liability. All my submissions on behalf of constituents have been rejected. One constituent has made 20 separate claims for arbitration on differing aspects. All have gone unanswered. Perhaps the Minister will confirm that to date British Coal has not accepted any cases for simple arbitration.

To whom, therefore, do we look when seeking immediate help for our constituents, bearing in mind British Coal's intransigence? Under the existing legislation, it can only be to the Lands Tribunal. In the past, the huge cost precluded that course as an option for hard-pressed claimants. However, the White Paper stated that British Coal would not ask for costs if individuals made their own representations to the tribunal instead of employing a battery of expert witnesses and barristers. Having taken nine months to clarify the position, I am pleased to inform the House that two of my constituents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Goodwin of 112 Shortwood Avenue, Hucknall, have made a submission to the registrar of the Lands Tribunal for arbitration to determine their claim. On behalf of the many people who need help in my constituency, I have personally thanked Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin for being the front runners on this course. Time will tell whether we have done the right thing. However, I believe in the old adage "Nothing ventured, nothing gained." If the Goodwins' case is successful, the Lands Tribunal will require a substantial increase in staff to cope with the number of applications that it will receive, or it might just dawn on British Coal that it should behave in a civilised way, thus saving everybody time and energy.

During last year's debate I highlighted a number of outstanding cases in my constituency. It will come as no surprise to those of us who have to deal with British Coal estates department to know that they are still outstanding. Today I could relate many further cases in my constituency which could take the debate to 5 o'clock were I not sure that the cases already highlighted by Opposition Members and by my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Dr. Woodcock) had made it clear that there was still a long way to go.

One of the most traumatic effects of coal mining subsidence is that which lengthy and time-consuming negotiations with British Coal have on human beings. Many people involved have had their lives, health and businesses severely affected by their experiences. There is constant disruption to their daily life and work as people strive for justice and for an equitable solution, and in doing so receive no recompense for the expense and time involved.

Speaking on behalf of my constituents, I do not request the Government to take action. Our patience has run out and we now demand a promise today from the Minister that legislation will be introduced and enacted.

1.10 pm

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on choosing this subject for debate because of the serious problem in mining constituencies such as his, mine and those of Conservative Members. I recognise the fight that has been put up in the House on behalf of our constituents in mining areas over mining subsidence. Secondly, I sincerely thank the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Dr. Woodcock) for his comments about me. As he said, we had a close association for a number of years on the magistrates' bench at Mansfield. The hon. Gentleman was a fair magistrate and is a fair Member of Parliament. This morning he severely criticised the Government for not having taken action on behalf of our constituents, many of whom have had a raw deal. It is time that the Government took some action about this problem.

I have seized every opportunity to fight in the House on behalf of those people, and it has been an uphill struggle, but I feel that we are over the top now and we are coming down the hill. Whenever I have had the opportunity I have tried to knock the Minister out with one fair blow, but it seems that we will win the battle on points. I am looking forward to the Minister's reply to the debate and I hope that he will respond to the points that we put to him.

The hon. Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) is sitting in the Minister's place while the Minister nips out to have a bite, no doubt, and I do not deny him that. He cannot sit here all day without a drink or a bite, but I am a little disappointed that the Minister is not here to listen to my speech as I wanted to say one or two things to him before turning to the real problem—mining subsidence. I believe that the Minister is a fair Minister. We often talk outside this place and he says very nice things to me and comes my way on the problems. But when I speak to him in the House he is really vicious to me. I am only speaking on behalf of those whom I represent in my constituency who have problems.

I do not altogether blame the Minister. I blame the present Chancellor of the Exchequer, because not all that long ago he was the Secretary of State for Energy. When we put the problems to him, he did not want to know. Then following on from him, as Secretary of State for Energy, was the present Secretary of State for Social Security. He did not help us either. They just did not want to know. I got the distinct impression, when they were Secretaries of State for Energy, that they were just letting the National Coal Board, as it was known at that time, do as it liked. It could walk all over those people whom we represent—those complainants who are not and have not been getting a fair deal with their mining subsidence claims.

However, the situation has changed. We had two years of MacGregor, and look at the mess he made of the mining industry. People have subsidence problems because of the mining industry. I was lucky enough to be selected to initiate an Adjournment debate only three or four weeks ago, when, once again, I chose the subject of mining subsidence. My hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield also spoke in that debate. The Minister was going our way that night. I could see a light in the tunnel. I am hoping that we will see a massive light today in the interests of our constituents. We need help back in the mining areas.

The Government encourage people to own their own properties, and that has happened. However, many people in our mining areas have problems with their properties because of the damage caused by the mining industry. The Government have a responsibility. I am sick to death of seeing the Minister about the problem. The Minister just passes it back to the mining industry—British Coal and the National Coal Board before that. Many Nottinghamshire hon. Members, for example, went to see the chairman of the board. He told us that we had to go back to the area where the problems are. He passed the buck back to the areas. We then go to see the area director, but we get no change there either. We are in the same boat—no one wants to do anything. We go to the Minister and he passes it back. We go to the chairman of the board and he passes it back, because he says that it is a matter for legislation. What we are appealing for this morning is a change in that legislation in the interests of those people whom we represent.

I shall carry on with what I have to say now that the appropriate Minister has taken his place.

Mr. Andy Stewart: Start again.

Mr. Haynes: No, I shall not start again; that would take too much time. Other hon. Members who have problems in their areas want to speak. The hon. Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick), for example, has a pit in his area. Before he was elected to the House, there were a number of pits there. No doubt he has subsidence problems in his constituency, because he is here this morning and is obviously interested in the debate. I hope that he will put up as good an argument as his colleagues before him.

Before you came into the Chair, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was a little disappointed that the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) was slipped into the debate. I thought to myself, "What will he talk about? How many pits are there in Hornsey?" He happens, however, to be the Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment. I thought to myself that he would be on our side—and, by God, he was. He spoke about the unfairness of some of the public bodies, who walk all over everybody instead of giving fair treatment. He was right. I hope that people outside will read the hon. Member's contribution because it was made by a senior Conservative. The Minister is faced with a real problem today—or is he? I do not think he has a problem because he can get up at the Dispatch Box to tell us what he will do.

I shall cite two examples only, but they are really bad ones. The first concerns an 82-year-old lady whose husband worked at the pit. They saved and saved. They did not go into an elderly people's bungalow supplied by the local authority; they bought their own out of the savings made from the husband's life-long work at the pit. What happened? The property was seriously damaged so they made a claim to, at that time, the National Coal Board for that damage to be repaired or for compensation to be given. But what happened? The poor fellow died and left a widow on her own. She came crying to me at my Saturday morning surgery because she had made a claim to the NCB, but it had told her that it was out of time. That is scandalous. The industry did the damage and it has every cause to put it right by repair or through compensation. When that old lady made her claim the board said that it was going to go under her house again with a different seam. It said that it would not pay out twice and that it would do the necessary little repairs and would do the real jobs later. Nine and a half years later the board said that she was out of time. That is scandalous. She had a genuine claim on a genuine property and yet those—I nearly called them something then, but I just managed to hold it back in time. At that time the NCB continued to reject her claim in line with the legislation. That shows just how stupid the industry is.

[Mr. Haynes]

That legislation must be changed in the interests of the people and that is why we are here giving the Minister a rough ride, I hope, so that he will come our way and put matters right.

Currently some people can accept compensation instead of British Coal calling in an outside contractor to do the repairs. In my second example the people said, "We will take the compensation"; but that compensation covered nowhere near the repairs to be done to the property. Who the hell do the people at Hobart house and in the various areas think that they are kidding? It is time that the Minister got on his bike and travelled around and told the area directors and the bloke at Hobart house where to get off. The Minister should tell them to get something done in the interests of the people who have had a real raw deal.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) mentioned how, under the NCB regime, officials were on the fiddle—I know that it is history, but it damn well happened. They went down the line for it, and quite right too. The result, however, is that the people we represent have suffered. Those officials should be locked up in a cell because of what they have done. They fiddled from the taxpayer and they should be ashamed of themselves, it is the people we represent who have done the suffering.

I hope that the Minister will take on board what I have said as it is a serious matter. Before he came in I said that he was a fair Minister. In my Adjournment debate he started to come our way. I am convinced that the Minister is concerned about what has happened out there over the years. I do not blame him for it; I blame the people before him. He is, however, coming our way as he has talked sensibly about the problem and I hope that he will do so again today.

There are all manner of things happening. I went to look at two bungalows in my constituency that were advertised. I knew that it was an area in which properties have been damaged by mining subsidence. Because of the serious damage to the two bungalows, British Coal bought them from the owners so that they could move on and buy other properties. That shows how much money it would have cost to repair them. British Coal then put the bungalows on the market to "flog" them, and they did it through an estate agent. In the advertisements for those properties it was not mentioned that they were affected by mining subsidence. Somebody could have bought a pig in a poke and found out about it afterwards. That is the sort of thing that is going on in British Coal. It is damned well deceitful, and it should be checked by the Minister.

Some of my constituents have had to wait for a very long time. The hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston talked about the Waddilove report. The previous Secretary of State sat on that report and was not prepared to do anything about it. It was two years before it got to the House and before we knew exactly what Waddilove had said. When we did receive it, we realised why the Secretary of State had sat on it. It was clearly in favour of the complainants. No wonder the Secretary of State sat on it. The matter is now wide open and we know what the Waddilove report says and how the complainants are suffering. We know how British Coal is treating people and it is high time that something was done.

The first question that I ask people who come to see me about a subsidence problem is whether they have an agent to represent them to British Coal. Nine times out of ten they say yes. However, hon. Members have found that they are doing the agent's flipping job, and that is wrong because it is not our responsibility. When the complainant talks to the agent, the agent quietly says, "Go and have a word with your Member of Parliament." It lands on our doorstep and people come to us. Hon. Members have talked about the thousands of claims that drop on our doorstep and for which we are not responsible. Our responsibility is to see that the Minister and the Government do something about the problem.

Mr. Andy Stewart: The hon. Member touches on a topical subject. I recently wrote to an agent and received from him a letter on A4 paper. In the last paragraph he said that he had written to me as a favour because he is not paid to write to Members of Parliament.

Mr. Haynes: That is a shocking state of affairs. There is a great amount of fiddling going on as well.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Haynes: No, because I have not yet answered the question asked by the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart). I am really drawing the Conservative Members who are trying to get in. The hon. Member for Sherwood is correct.

Agents get a percentage rake-off on the compensation settlement. I visited a property for which British Coal had offered £6,500. It was the gable end house of five very old properties and the gable wall was falling. The agent wrote to me and said that the compensation offered by British Coal was not enough and that the claim was worth £32,000. That speaks for itself. The chappie wanted to accept the £6,500 but the agent said no, thinking, "I will get 5 per cent. of this lot and if it is a large figure I will get a large amount." That has been going on along with the fiddling by British Coal. Blokes in British Coal were getting a large percentage rake-off as well. That is why they have been sent to Lincoln prison and they will be there a long time.

When British Coal is not prepared to move and the agent gets into difficulties, he suggests taking British Coal to court. He puts it in writing, but finishes off by saying, "It will cost you £5,000." Who will write out a cheque for that amount? Will that elderly widow, for example? Such a figure is scandalous. Big businesses do not have a problem. The Mansfield brewery was affected by subsidence, and British Coal rejected its claim. The brewery had an agent, who told it to take British Coal to court. The brewery is rolling in money. It makes masses of profits. It even has a big advertisement using ex-President Reagan drinking a pint of Mansfield bitter, so it must make a nice profit. Because it is a big business that can afford to take British Coal to court, when it threatened to do so British Coal coughed up. The ordinary person cannot do that because he cannot put his hands on such amounts of money.

I have had enough of the buck passing. The buck stops at that Dispatch Box in front of the Minister. I hope that the Minister will pick up that buck. If he wants, I will put a buck on the Dispatch Box so that, when he gets up to grab it, he will tell us what he proposes to do.

We have had a flipping good debate and hon. Members have expressed themselves well. I congratulate Conservative Members on the way in which they have conducted themselves. They have an incentive to do so. There were some elections yesterday, so no wonder the beggars are coming in here today to support an Opposition motion. They are looking after their backs. I do not mind that. They are entitled to do that, especially when, at the same time, they are speaking out on behalf of people who have had a raw deal.

I was a little disappointed by one thing. I do not want to bring in the National Union of Mineworkers or the Union of Democratic Mineworkers, but the hon. Member for Sherwood did when there was no need for it. He used a political argument, just as the Minister did when, from a sedentary position, he accused the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston—the hon. Gentleman may not have heard this, but I did—of having a financial interest. The hon. Gentleman might have, but in the properties that he owns in my constituency live people who are affected by mining subsidence. I will back the hon. Gentleman to the hilt because he is speaking in the interests of those people, so he has every right to clobber the Government for what they have not been doing about mining subsidence. I have cleared the air for the hon. Gentleman, who made a first-class contribution. The Minister could only make snide remarks which were uncalled for, because the hon. Gentleman was right.

My hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield and I have been criticised by the UDM for raising the issue of mining subsidence. It said that by bawling our heads off in the House of Commons about mining subsidence, we were closing pits. However, I remember that the general secretary of the UDM in Nottinghamshire had his property seen to and done beautifully because he had a claim against British Coal. He does not own the property—it belongs to the union. It cost a fortune to put the house right and now he has the neck to criticise my hon. Friend and I for raising, on behalf of thousands of constituents, the problem of subsidence. It was nasty to say that after his own property had been repaired.

I have tried so often to deliver the knock-out blow to the Minister but I have not yet been able to hit him. We talk nicely to each other outside the Chamber. We do not talk as I am talking now. On this occasion we are really mounting an action in the interests of our constituents. I think that we are winning on points, and I think that we shall win the battle. British Coal—and the National Coal Board before it—has not given a fair deal to those who made claims. I feel within my bones that the Minister will do something about the problem for he is a sincere chap. He has told me privately that he does not like unfairness. I know that I am giving away secrets, but he is prepared to take action to eradicate unfairness.

We have had unfairness for a long time. At long last people have brought themselves together and, in effect, have said, "It is going to stop. The buck stops here." There is no doubt that the Minister will get the message when a meeting takes place next Tuesday. We who represent our constituents back home will come to Westminster to put the case to the Minister, and it is a good one.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield on picking coal mining subsidence as the topic of his motion. It is a beauty. He could have selected another topic, but instead he chose the right one. I believe that the Minister has got the message. If he does not tell us what we all want to hear, he is in for a rough ride next Tuesday. He will not buy me off with a cup of coffee and biscuit in the Department. He will have to listen to what is said as he has had to listen to us today.

I hope that the Minister will come our way and that we shall sort out all the problems so that our consitutents can say, "That Minister is a first-class chap. He has given us what we want. Our representatives did a good job on Friday morning and afternoon in the House of Commons. The result is that the Minister—a wonderful young fellow—stood at the Dispatch Box and gave us what we wanted. He gave us something for which we have been fighting for a long time."

I hope that the battle has been won. I hope that it is all over and that we shall be working together in the interests of our people back home.

1.38 pm

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): I represent a declining mining area, so I am especially grateful to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I declare an interest, although it is perhaps not necessary to do so. My family was involved in tin mining in Cornwall for many generations and I feel the sadness that is felt by my constituents that only one pit is left in Bosworth. Desford has gone, Merrilees deep drift mine has gone, and Bagworth is soon to close.

It is clear from the remarks of my hon. Friends the Members for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) and for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Woodcock) and those of the hon. Members for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) and for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) that there is still great concern about compensation arrangements. I apologise to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale). I was unable to be present to hear his speech as I was detained on other duties earlier in the day.

My hon. Friend the Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) had hoped to be in his place, but unfortunately, for pressing reasons, he has been unable to attend. In his constituency, in an area part of which was part of my constituency until the boundary changes, there are I understand problems near former pits around Ellistown, the Nailstone mine which is still working, Snibstone where the new mining museum has been opened and is such a success, Whitwick and Lount.

Subsidence can be fast, slow and unexpected. The Dolcoath mine between Redruth and Camborne in Cornwall, where my family came from, is famous for the enormous extent of its underground workings. A rather unusual case of subsidence occurred at that mine in 1828. A book from the time states:

> "The movement—which continued for several weeks—was so slow that the miners who at its commencement were employed at deep levels, by climbing uncrushed portions of the ladders in some places and waiting their opportunity and creeping through crevices between moving rocks in others, managed to reach surface at the west part of the mine in safety."

I am sure that we are all pleased that miners would never be placed in that predicament today. However, mine subsidence still occurs. The point of my little story is that it can occur long after mines have been sunk. That is the problem that we are finding in my constituency.

The motion implies that British Coal and its predecessor, the National Coal Board, have done next to nothing to compensate those suffering from the effects of mining subsidence. I cannot accept that. Something has been done. Similarly, I cannot accept that the Government have taken no action. We must recognise that the Government have acted. I want to refer to some of the problems which have affected my constituency.

I welcome the clear undertaking given by the Minister earlier this year that he was aware of the real problems associated with subsidence. He said that "The question . . . is how to ensure that those affected by subsidence get a fair deal."—[Official Report, 11 May 1989; Vol. 152, c. 1104].

I suggest that the Government have acted to ensure that those affected by subsidence get a fair deal, but they have not done enough. Many of the people affected in my constituency will, like others today, be looking to the Minister for new initiatives to deal with the problem. We have already heard about the important recommendations in the Waddilove report which was based on the 1981 report of the commission on energy and the environment.

The Waddilove committee made 65 recommendations, but it did not recommend a radical revision or overhaul of the system. One principal recommendation involved improvement of public notification procedures. That recommendation, which has been accepted, has had a very beneficial effect. I shall illustrate that by referring to discussions that I had yesterday with council officers from Hinckley and Bosworth borough council. On 20 June, the council's planning committee will consider a report based on a report provided by British Coal about the workings around Bagworth, Nailstone and Markfield. I am pleased to say that the Coal Board's report covers the problems in some detail, for example, outlining the difficulties faced in the areas east of Wigg Farm, south of Bagworth colliery and north of Fox Covert Farm. The report does not skimp and it has had helpful and useful results—I was going to say "meaningful", but I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) would agree that that is a terribly abused word.

As a result of other Waddilove recommendations, British Coal is at least committed to good standards of repair in all cases of subsidence. We have already heard why that commitment may not have been fulfilled in all circumstances, but the fact that claimants can now use their own contractors for repairs, for instance, is significant, as is the fact that British Coal provides the Secretary of State for Energy with an annual report on the administration of subsidence claims. I understand that, so far, British Coal has implemented more than half the committee's recommendations, although I agree with the hon. Member for Ashfield that the presentation of the report may have been a slow process.

Another helpful development has been the publication of a new Department of Energy leaflet offering advice on handling subsidence problems, which is a credit to my hon. Friend the Minister. The inclusion of the address of the area surveyor and minerals manager will make it easier for people to contact British Coal officials. British Coal's new procedures, the annual report to the Secretary of State and the report of mining activities to councils are three steps in the right direction.

There is some evidence that the impact of subsidence problems on householders has been reduced. Both the number of new claims and the total number of claims outstanding have fallen. I believe that in 1983-84 some 50,000 claims were outstanding, but in 1986-87 the figure was down to 36,000, and last year saw a further fall of 14 per cent. to 31,000.

Mr. Meale: Part of the reason for that is that so many claims are being denied because of the implementation of the six-year rule.

Mr. Tredinnick: I accept that. In my constituency, certainly, the six-year rule presents claimants with considerable problems. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will consider that point sympathetically.

British Coal now takes more account of subsidence in its planning; it also includes it in the costing of all proposed workings. There has been progress, although the pace may be that not of the hare but of a somewhat smaller creature.

There are serious problems in my constituency of which I hope the Minister will take note. We have heard about the problems facing individuals, but businesses also face tremendous problems. In my constituency, the Bagworth to Merrylees road was closed for more than a month—due to subsidence outside the main gate of the old Desford colliery. The Merrylees mine area is now an industrial complex offering employment to many of my constituents. When the road was closed it posed an enormous burden on the businesses which had to make a long detour. There is a good case for those companies receiving some compensation. The companies include major employers such as Butterley Buick and Hercock Simpson, which receive nothing from British Coal although their businesses have suffered seriously as a result of this problem.

It is no good British Coal saying that the problems are minimal. Not long ago in my constituency we had the case of the disappearing digger. I am referring not to an Australian who had too many "triple Xs", although when we consider the result of the recent Test match some of us might wish that Alan Border were a disappearing digger, but to a disappearing JCB which popped into a hole and could not be found. It simply sank overnight in an area that is supposed to be fairly safe, the site of the old Merrylees deep drift mine.

Sporting facilities in the Bosworth area face problems. The Bosworth parliamentary division has a long tradition of bowling and cricket, which I support at a time when sport seems in decline in this country. It is a credit to my constituents that they have such tremendous sporting interests. It was tough on the Barlestone mining institute when its bowling green suffered subsidence and the club received nothing for it. Barlestone football club pitch suffered movement too. In this House we are familiar with moving goalposts and tilting pitches because we play on them all the time, but I do not see why my constituents should have to suffer that.

The National Coal Board sells off houses and, in the small print of the contract, exempts itself from responsibility for any future problem. What is the use of a beautiful ex-Coal Board house which might make a lovely home when who knows what rabbit warrens of mining passages may run underneath? I say, "Who knows?" because none of us knows and none of us can find out because the information is not available. That is probably because it is a nationalised industry. If it were privatised it might have kept proper records.

We could all give cases, and I know of many of them. The subsidence problems faced by a family business in my constituency should go on the record. A. E. Statham and Sons process and distribute potatoes. Mr. Statham built a factory on land above old mine workings. Very soon subsidence occurred which necessitated repairs to the floors and foundations of the main storage area and the walls. The problem was first raised by my predecessor, Sir Adam Butler, who served his constituents so well. He started work on the case in 1980, and I have followed his work since then. The Coal Board accepted liability and arranged for the work to be carried out.

The beginning of the necessary repairs was also the start of a long saga of frustration about the standard of repairs. Another big problem that my constituent faced was that British Coal was not prepared to carry out the repairs outside usual working hours. My constituent was trying to run a business facing this enormous hurdle. The specifications for the work were poorly drawn up and the job was not properly supervised. Fortunately, Mr. Statham managed to continue in business and, to cut a long story short—think of the parliamentary time which has gone into this long case—he received some, albeit inadequate, compensation.

I know that other hon. Members wish to speak in the debate, so I will finish without giving the House the summary that I had planned to give. I hope that the Minister will respond positively and I look forward to hearing his speech.

1.55 pm

Mr. Dick Douglas (Dunfermline, West): I had not originally intended to take part in this important debate, initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale). At one time in a previous incarnation I almost became secretary of the Co-operative movement's education committee in Mansfield but, perhaps wisely, it chose not to employ me. In any case, I know the area reasonably well——

Mr. Haynes: I served on the Co-operative board.

Mr. Douglas: Now I know what happened.

I represent what used to be a coal mining constituency, although now there are no active pits within its boundaries. Some of the few remaining miners in my constituency are employed in the Longannet complex. I shall allude to it again in a moment.

We are discussing the impact of mining on the environment and the consensus is that those who disrupt or pollute the environment should pay for the social and economic disruption that they cause. Having established this basic principle, we need to find a way to put it into practice. I have received many letters from constituents about subsidence caused by British Coal, not below but above ground—by the number of lorries that pass through a small village in my constituency called Cairneyhill, driving from opencast mining operations in Fife.

How we enforce the principle that the polluter pays is what counts. My hon. Friends have made a good case for saying that the enforcement procedures bear too heavily on those who cannot afford to go to court and are weighted too much in favour of the big corporations, such as British Coal, which can afford to put off the inconvenienced individual who suffers damage and disruption to his property.

We must take national action. It is not only public corporations that mishandle the individual: private corporations can do the same. We need a scheme that can help these people, and the scheme that we have is legal aid. However, because of the requirement for a reasonable chance of success in the courts, legal aid is difficult to obtain. There is a case for someone such as an independent ombudsman to assist the aggrieved individual.

There is increasing public worry about pollution, and there is some indication of that in the likely results of the European elections, with the exit polls suggesting that the Green party achieved 2 million votes. That illustrates the underlying concern of people in Europe as a whole about the environment. The Coal Board is sensitive to criticism in respect of acid rain and is anxious to prove its claim that it is not as great a polluter as has been suggested.

The Longannet complex is closely linked to a power station and produces coal having a very slow sulphur content. As the Minister knows, important negotiations are under way between the South of Scotland electricity board and British Coal over a reasonably long-term contract for the supply of 2 million tonnes of power station coal. If Longannet does not win that contract, there will be considerable subsidence in central Scotland because a coal mine there dedicated to a power station will no longer be utilised. The social cost of that will be borne by the community as a whole and by the Coal Board, whose £400 million operating profit would be substantially reduced.

Concern has been expressed about the effect of subsidence on property. Under the old rating system, such damage would be reflected in lower rates, but under the change to poll tax property owners will have to pay the full sum regardless of the state of their property.

Because I want to be fair to Conservative Members who have massive constituency interests, I bring my remarks to a conclusion with this observation. I do not know what is the practice now between the usual channels, but when I entered the House in 1970, if an understanding was reached between right hon. and hon. Members as to the allocation of time available for a debate, their respective Whips would get together and reach an understanding. That was done to protect the interests of Back Benchers. Today is for Back Benchers, not for members of the Government or Opposition Front Benchers. Nevertheless, I understand that the type of friendly understanding to which I referred has broken down. Mr. Speaker can do very little about it, but Back Benchers ought to put down some markers. They should reach a harmonious understanding on the timetabling—I use that term loosely —of motions. The usual channels ought to take account of it. The dreary procedure of talking out motions would not then be needed.

Some, though not many, of my constituents have suffered from the effects of mining subsidence. However, we ought to look after the interests of all Back Benchers, particularly when they are successful in the ballot.

2.5 pm

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): I do not represent a constituency with a coal mining interest, but I take a particular interest in the law relating to compulsory purchase and compensation. The steady and logical arguments that are always pursued by my hon. Friends the Members for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) and for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) have been of great benefit to the mining industry for some years. They are of considerably more benefit than the erratic outpourings of one trade union leader.

The Minister's career is rapidly recovering from the flattering remarks that were made about him by the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes). He will, I believe, have to introduce at some time a Bill to cover compulsory purchase and compensation. It is not just a question of subsidence within the mining industry. It is a complex and complicated issue. It began in the middle of the 19th century. I apologise to Hansard for using the Latin phrase "quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit"—that whatsoever is planted in or attached to the soil remains with the soil.

It was rather hard luck for any farmer who died on 28 September: the landlord automatically took his crop on 29 September. Gradual progress was made towards the end of the 19th century. Further progress was made in 1919 under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act. Yet more of the customs of the country were covered in McCartney v. Metropolitan Board of Works, a major decision affecting the law on compensation. In 1946—not a particularly good year for legislation—there was the Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act which led to a number of additional complications. By 1947, things were getting even more desperate. Under the Town and Country Planning Act the Labour Government tried to nationalise all development land values. That did not last for very long. There have been town and country planning Acts in almost every year since then. There was also the Land Compensation Act 1973.

The legislative programme of the last 100 to 150 years has led to great complexities. I ask my hon. Friend not to go down the same road. I sat for many hours in the Committee that considered the Water Bill. The Minister recognised that a new compulsory purchase code for land held by water companies would be needed. Many similar matters are covered by the Acts covering electricity and gas supplies. Will every statutory undertaking need a separate code? A comprehensive Bill dealing with compulsory purchase compensation must be introduced, but it must be sufficiently flexible to take account of the needs of different industries, including subsidence in the mining industry.

The hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) drew attention to many problems, but many of them have been created because the nationalised industries do not have flexibility to look after people in a reasonable way. Now that at long last the mining industry is becoming increasingly profitable, we can surely afford to address compulsory purchase and compensation in a more flexible way.

2.9 pm

Mr. Gerald Howarth (Cannock and Burntwood): I join my colleagues in congratulating the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on choosing this subject for debate and for so eloquently, if in a marathon speech, giving us the benefit of his detailed knowledge. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), who has been an equally assiduous proponent of these matters on behalf of his constituents and all our constituents generally.

Today I have moved Bench to indicate that I am speaking in the capacity not of parliamentary private secretary to my hon. Friend the Minister but as a constituency member with coal mining interests as my constituents are very much affected by the problem of coal mining subsidence.

Cannock is well known for its association with the coal industry. In 1945 there were 22 pits in my constituency and today there is not one, although there are two just outside it. I pay tribute to my constituents in the coal industry who have produced a tremendous turnaround in the fortunes of the industry and, I am glad to say, are making money for themselves, for our local economy and for the nation at large.

Like many hon. Members who have spoken, since I was elected in 1983 I have found subsidence to be one of the most difficult problems affecting my constituency. As everyone has pointed out, the villain of the piece is British Coal, which has not dealt with the problem satisfactorily. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) said, this is not unassociated with the fact that British Coal is a nationalised industry. Private sector industries simply cannot afford to be so overbearing and churlish about the anxieties of people affected by their operations.

The hon. Member for Mansfield said that home owners simply do not trust British Coal, and that is a widespread feeling throughout the parts of the country where coal mining has been or is being carried on. The sooner that the British coal industry can move into the private sector, the sooner it will have to conform to the disciplines of the private sector. In these modern times the private sector cannot put up with so many dissatisfied customers who will only speak ill of the business. There will be further advantage in competition.

Mr. Douglas: What about British Airways?

Mr. Howarth: My kinsman, the hon. Member for Dunfermline, West (Mr. Douglas), says that I should refer to British Airways, and I am happy to do so. British Airways enjoys superb competition from British Midland and as a result the travelling public get a better deal.

Two issues are involved here. The first is that the problems caused by subsidence are not confined to damage. Blight is a major problem. A crack in one house in my constituency on the new estate sent metaphorical shock waves through the entire housing market, affecting neighbouring houses and streets. Confidence in housing in that area was seriously shaken. Local surveyors simply reported to purchasers that subsidence had taken place and building societies would not lend and people could not sell their houses, they could not move jobs and they could not raise funds on their properties for business or pleasure purposes. As a result of getting together with some of the local and professional interests involved, we were able to dampen that down. I pay tribute to one estate agent in my constituency, Mr. Graham Morris, who did a tremendous amount to take the heat out of the problem.

The second issue is the damage. In my constituency the difficulties are faced by the owners of older properties. The problem is well illustrated by one particular area, the Church hill area of Hednesford, which is well known to those who did national service in the Royal Air Force as one of the bleakest, most inhospitable and horrid places in the land on which to do their square bashing. By the time that I arrived as Member of Parliament for Cannock and Burntwood in 1983, St. Peter's church, a very fine Victorian church, was falling apart, but already negotiations with British Coal were at an advanced stage for compensation of about £250,000 to be paid. Further down the hill is the Hednesford Victoria working men's club. The bottom literally fell out of that club. I went there a couple of days ago and saw a gaping hole underneath the club. The day after, British Coal sent round a JCB, on a no-prejudice basis, to fill up the hole. There is even a road sign on the hill which says, "Road liable to subsidence". In 1978 a sewer collapsed and the board elected to make a payment to the local authority.

If, however, one draws a line on the map between the club and the church—both properties which have been bailed out by British Coal—it is a completely different story for the private houses on that line which have suffered damage. My constituent, Mrs. Flinn, of 128 Church hill has suffered damage to her property and so, too, has Mr. Walker of 140 Church hill—but can they get any joy out of British Coal? They cannot, because they are not a working men's club or a church. They have found it impossible to get any satisfaction. Mrs. Flinn sent me a letter which I believe sums up the position. She said:

> "Public places, i.e. St. Peter's church and Church hill working men's club, seem to be top priority, but, when it comes to people's homes, they are right at the bottom of the list."

It is intolerable that British Coal should seek to take advantage of its massive underwriting by the public purse to do selective deals with people who they feel they need to bail out and to ignore the poor private house owners who cannot, as hon. Members on both sides of the House have said, afford to go through the long-winded procedures of the Lands Tribunal and all the rest of it to establish their rights.

British Coal has told me that in this case it is natural movement in the earth's surface that has caused the problem, because mining activity ceased 20 years ago. I went to see a splendid mining engineering consultant who told me that there is no such thing as natural movement in the earth's surface in the United Kingdom. It is significant, too, that the only places in my constituency where there are problems are in areas where there has been mining activity. I do not see how British Coal can have the continuing gall to pay out on some properties but not to pay out to poor householders who do not have the resources to take on Goliath.

I believe that I am in the best position to know that my hon. Friend the Minister has done more than anybody to try to improve the situation. As long as he is at the Department of Energy, I am sure that we shall have a worthy champion of our concerns about mining subsidence. We look forward to hearing what my hon. Friend will say. Ultimately, however, I am sure that the answer lies in the privatisation of the coal industry.

2.18 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy (Mr. Michael Spicer): As has been said already, the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) has raised an important matter. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth) stated, this subject has been pursued by a number of hon. Members on both sides of the House. My hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), for instance, has represented this cause assiduously during the period in which he has been in Parliament.

In view of the intervention by the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes), I must say that I in no way would denigrate the contributions that have been made over a period by my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Dr. Woodcock). The fact that he has not a constituency interest, and that perhaps he has some business interest in the matter, which he has always declared, does not mean that he should not be deeply involved in the matter. I do not want the hon. Gentleman ever to cast any implied aspersions on what my hon. Friend may say on this matter.

I came to the House with a 39-page speech in which I intended to outline in great detail what the Government plan to do on this subject. However, so eloquent have been the speeches on both sides of the House, notably that of the hon. Member for Mansfield, who spoke for two hours, that, far from giving a speech of 39 pages, I have time only to give various indications to the House of the principles by which the Government will govern their actions in this regard.

I am very much of the view that subsidence causes both material difficulties and mental anguish to the people affected. That come out strongly from the debate and anyone in British Coal or anyone else who was unaware of such problems will be much more aware of them after this debate, in which some excellent speeches have been made.

I am sure that the House recognises that subsidence is an inevitable consequence of modern, deep-mining techniques. The problems associated with subsidence will therefore remain as long as there is a coal industry, and I certainly predict—I suspect that the Opposition Front Bench spokesmen agree with me—that that industry will be with us for a long time and will undertake deep mining for many years to come.

I intervened in the speech of the hon. Member for Mansfield because it is important to remember that the industry is under considerable financial pressure—far greater than was implied in the hon. Gentleman's speech. There is no question but that the industry is still suffering considerable losses. No doubt I shall return to that aspect when I come to the House some time in the future to ask for more assistance for it.

Currently, the coal industry is under great pressure from the environmental lobby, and in some respects that pressure is not entirely fair. No doubt the industry will address those problems in the future, but it will cost money. It is important to put this debate in context and to point out that the industry is not flush with cash but is still under considerable pressure. However, I completely accept, on behalf of the Government, that there is a problem with subsidence. How are those affected by subsidence to get a fair deal?

Mention has been made of the Waddilove committee report of 1984 and about the lapse of time between that committee publishing its report and the response to it. It is important to remember that one of the committee's conclusions was that the system for compensation and repair had its shortcomings—undoubtedly it took that view—but it did not call for a radical revision or overhaul of the system. Hon. Members have pointed out, however, that the report identified a number of areas in which improvement could be made. The process of implementation—perhaps not fully recognised—has already begun.

[Mr. Michael Spicer]

As I stated to my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston in a written answer on 12 January 1989, British Coal has already implemented more than half the Waddilove committee's 65 recommendations.

A number of important changes are therefore in place. British Coal has, for example, improved its public notification procedures. It now publishes in local newspapers mining locations for the previous and next 12 months. I appreciate that it is important to ask how effective those notifications are. That is why we are currently conducting a review of how these procedures are operated. We shall then be able to see whether they have been effective.

One of the Waddilove committee recommendations on which it is important to focus—there were lots of them, but I do not have time to go through them all—concerns the necessity for the Secretary of State for Energy to be supplied with an annual report of the administration of the subsidence compensation and repair system in the previous year. I remind the House that the first of those reports was placed in the Library towards the end of last year. It shows that the numbers of new claims and the total number of claims outstanding are on their way down. They may not be coming down quickly enough, but in 1983-84 there were 52,000 claims outstanding, while in 1986-87 there were 37,000. The report shows that by last year the figure had fallen to 31,000. Some hon. Members have suggested that this reduction has been achieved by British Coal simply rejecting claims, but that is not true. In 1987-88, the last full year for which figures are available, British Coal settled more claims than it received.

Last year, British Coal spent £49 million on compensation and repairs. The hon. Member for Mansfield asked for a breakdown of the figure, and perhaps I can supply him with detailed figures in writing. The main point is that the £49 million does not contain a large element of administrative costs as he feared. It is the amount of compensation that was paid. That money has been spent by an industry which, as I have said, has serious financial problems. In addition, it currently makes provision of £260 million in its accounts for subsidence compensation.

It is a distortion—I have to use such a strong word—to say that in some way or other the industry is specifically gearing itself not to make settlements. British Coal has a substantial amount in its accounts for the payment of compensation and pays out almost £50 million a year in compensation settlements. That is indicative not of an industry unwilling to make settlements, but of one that has all sorts of bureaucratic problems.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth) and other hon. Members have said that we are talking about a nationalised industry and that it may well be that it operates differently from the way in which a private industry would have to operate. However, much money is set aside and paid out in subsidence compensation. The Government accept many of the recommendations in the Waddilove report for tightening up procedures. I would have gone through that matter in greater detail if I had had the time.

Mr. Barron: Why do the Government think that there should not be any form of the local adjudication that is specifically mentioned in the Waddilove report?

Mr. Spicer: I had intended to deal later with the question of the adjudication review, but I shall deal with it now in some detail as the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) has quite properly raised it. I know that it is at the root of many of the problems raised by hon. Members. At present the Lands Tribunal procedure can be used, and local independent arbitration is also available. The issue is about what matters can be dealt with by each form of adjudication.

British Coal says that if a matter is not sufficiently simple to be dealt with through local and independent arbitration it should be put to the Lands Tribunal. That is where the controversy arises because it has been said that the Lands Tribunal procedure is expensive. We are reviewing this matter as part of our total appraisal of Waddilove and we have said that we will look at it again before 1990. We shall bring forward the review of the way in which adjudication is conducted and shall review the criteria by which the distinction between the two types of arbitration is made. We shall look at the matter to see whether there is room for improvement.

Mr. Meale: I know that the Minister will not have time to answer all my points, but will he respond to one or two of them?

Mr. Spicer: I shall not have time to deal with the details, but the hon. Gentleman's idea of what he calls an independent legal centre, as part of the review procedure, is interesting, and we shall look at it in the context of what I have just announced to the House. We shall also look at the general circumstances in which arbitration takes place.

We accept the spirit of this motion and of the debate and attach great importance to it. We intend to legislate——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 21st June, Motions in the name of Mr. Neil Kinnock relating to Social Security and Community Charges (Scotland) may be proceeded with, though opposed, for one and a half hours after the first of them has been entered upon; and if proceedings thereon have not been previously disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall then put the Question already proposed from the Chair.—[Mr. Heathcoat-Amory.]

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Thursday 22nd June, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(b) of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), if proceedings on the Motion in the name of Mr. Secretary King relating to the draft Northern Ireland Act 1974 (Interim Period Extension) Order 1989 have not been previously disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall at Seven o'clock, or one and a half hours after the proceedings were entered upon, whichever is the later, put the Question thereon. —[Mr. Heathcoat-Amory.]

RAF Biggin Hill (Selection Centre)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Heathcoat-Amory.]

2.31 pm

Mr. John Hunt (Ravensbourne): I am grateful to have the opportunity to raise a matter that is of great concern to my constituents and many people well beyond the boundaries of Bromley. I am particularly pleased to see a number of hon. Members supporting me in the debate, in particular my hon. Friends the Members for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) and for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims), my Bromley colleagues, and my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker), who I think is hoping to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am referring to the proposed transfer of the RAF office and air crew selection centre from Biggin Hill to Cranwell. This came as a bolt from the blue last October and immediately aroused a wave of protest and indignation, not only from my constituents but from a wide range of groups associated with the RAF.

For many people in Britain and far beyond, there are strong emotional and historic ties with RAF Biggin Hill. It was, after all, the RAF's most famous war-time base and played a decisive role at a crucial stage in the second world war. As a young schoolboy in south-east London, I can remember the pride and excitement of seeing the Spitfires and Hurricanes valiantly defending our capital from the German bombers. I am told that some 1,600 enemy aircraft were shot down by pilots operating from Biggin Hill. We owe it to those men to ensure that an effective and meaningful RAF presence remains at Biggin Hill, and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will have noted that I am today wearing the RAF Biggin Hill tie as a mark of my commitment to the cause.

My hon. Friend the Minister has close links with Biggin Hill. He is a former distinguished mayor of the London borough of Bromley and I recall that his parents lived for many years at Leaves Green, just a stone's throw from the airfield. Therefore, like me, he knows of the important role that RAF Biggin Hill plays in the life of the local community. For example, it gives generous help and support to the Spitfire youth club in Biggin Hill and it involves itself in many other community projects within the borough. It is for this reason, among others, that the RAF station was given the freedom of the London borough of Bromley some time ago. It is for this reason also that the proposed closure has caused such distress and dismay in all parts of the borough.

We are told that on cost and service grounds there would be considerable advantages in moving the centre to RAF Cranwell. What are those advantages? I hope, for example, that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to quantify the cost advantages rather more convincingly than he has so far been able to do. His written answers to my questions on 24 January were somewhat vague. Real doubts have been raised about the projected savings of £10 million over 10 years. It seems that that figure would depend in part upon the cost of additional accommodation required at Cranwell. My hon. Friend has provided an estimate of £5·5 million at current prices for that. In four or five years, however, the figure could well be nearer £10 million. We must remember also that the RAF works services budget is already severely over-stretched.

[Mr. John Hunt]

A crucial matter is the capital receipts that are likely to accrue from any disposal of the site. The local Biggin Hill ward representative, Councillor David Haslam, who has considerable professional expertise in such matters, has calculated that the maximum likely to be raised in this way is £16 million, but many think that it would be a substantially smaller sum than that. We must remember that it is a green belt site, so the development potential is necessarily strictly limited.

In his written answer to me on 24 January my hon. Friend the Minister declined to give an estimate of the likely capital receipts, pleading what he called "commercial confidentiality". I hope that he will be a little more forthcoming this afternoon.

What about what are called service grounds? The accessibility of Cranwell is clearly inferior to that of Biggin Hill. My hon. Friend will know that Bromley South station is only a 15-minute train journey from Victoria, and that there is a regular bus service from Bromley to the camp gate at Biggin Hill. Cranwell cannot rival that and by comparison is a remote location.

Currently, 70 civilian personnel are employed at Biggin Hill. In the main, they are locally engaged civil servants who have considerable experience of the special skills that are involved in the selection process. As I understand it, none of them is prepared to move to Cranwell. Is the Minister seriously telling us that suitably experienced replacements will be readily available in Lincolnshire? If not, presumably RAF personnel will have to be recruited to fill the gap, and that means more expenditure. In addition, there will be redundancy payments for the civilians at Biggin Hill.

We cannot overestimate the importance to the RAF of a strong and flourishing air training corps. We have the Minister's assurance that the Biggin Hill squadron of the ATC will remain in its present buildings, and we all welcome that. It seems, however, that that misses the point that RAF Biggin Hill provides a support base for about 135 squadrons of the ATC and cadet forces throughout London and the south-east. If RAF Biggin Hill goes, one is bound to ask where they are to be located. I am sure that my hon. Friend will acknowledge that the continued existence of the ATC squadrons is vital to continued recruitment for the RAF as a whole. The question of recruitment is directly bound up with the location of the officers and aircrew selection centre. I understand that recruitment to the RAF is becoming progressively more difficult as a result of the declining numbers of school and university leavers. At the same time, the RAF is facing greater competition for the reducing number of available technically qualified youngsters.

As I have shown, the Biggin Hill officers and aircrew selection centre is well located within easy reach of London. Its buildings are tailor-made for its important job. In addition, the buildings are bought and paid for and still have plenty of useful life left in them. Incidentally, those buildings are also used for aircrew testing by the Army and the Navy flying arms to carry out aptitude and medical tests. If that facility is no longer available, the Army and Navy presumably would have to build their own facilities and that would be an additional cost to be placed on the debit side of the Minister's balance sheet.

For those reasons, many of us fail to understand the sense or logic in the Minister's proposal. May I therefore make a special request to the Minister this afternoon: while allowing the planning for the move to continue for the time being, will he also ensure that there is a ministerial review of the costs involved before any irrevocable decision is taken? It would also be greatly appreciated if he could find time to visit RAF Biggin Hill to see the splendid spirit there and the efficiency and effectiveness of the centre.

As the Minister will know, his predecessor visited the centre to announce the transfer proposal last October. In fact, it was his first visit there. My feeling was that he was immensely impressed by what he saw and that if he had come a little earlier he might not quite so readily have endorsed the closure plan.

I fully recognise that the Minister has undertaken to retain the chapel and the gate guardians on the site. That undertaking raises more questions and worries. In his letter to me on 12 October, my hon. Friend the Minister's predecessor said:

> "The Chapel will be retained as a lasting symbol of the Station's historical role in the Battle of Britain and continue to be accessible to the many visitors it attracts."

However, my understanding is that, without an RAF presence, there could be no chapel. Without regular services, I contend that the chapel would soon become a very sad and sorry symbol. I would welcome any reassurances that my hon. Friend can offer on that point.

More than 11 years ago the selection centre was under a similar threat of closure. In November 1977, my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook), whose constituency at the time included Biggin Hill, initiated an Adjournment debate. In those days, the intention was to transfer the officers and aircrew selection centre from Biggin Hill to the RAF station at Bentley Priory. On reading the record, it is interesting to see that the move was justified on the basis of so-called cost-effective benefits to defence expenditure. Apparently however, those benefits were subsequently in doubt because the transfer plan was eventually abandoned. I hope today that I can match the dramatically successful eloquence of my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington on that occasion. I look to my hon. Friend the Minister to maintain my local reputation in that respect.

The station crest of RAF Biggin Hill bears a chain with the motto "The Strongest Link." It seems to me that we owe it to the brave fighter pilots of the Battle of Britain, as well as to future RAF generations, to ensure that that link is not broken by a foolish and short-sighted decision aimed at achieving financial savings which, in the end, could prove illusory and highly damaging.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): With the leave of my hon. Friend and neighbour the Member for Ravensbourne (Mr. Hunt) and that of the Minister, I rise briefly to support my hon. Friend's powerful plea for the retention of an RAF presence at Biggin Hill.

I must declare a special interest. I am a graduate of the 1942 class of the aircrew selection centre, which was then based at St. John's Wood. It was a great pleasure and honour subsequently to be elected Member for Parliament for the constituency in which Biggin Hill was then sited.

As my hon. Friend has said, we survived an attempt by the Labour Government in 1977 to transfer Biggin Hill on grounds of cost, and I am surprised and ashamed today that a Conservative Government should see fit, on the same grounds, to abandon the RAF presence there. The very name of Biggin Hill evokes the spirit of patriotism and endeavour in the British nation, and I should have thought that when considering such a move the Minister would take into account more carefully than he has in the past the effect that it would have on morale and recruitment.

Biggin Hill is of great importance to both the RAF and the surrounding population, and I plead earnestly with the Minister not to take this action.

2.46 pm

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne (Mr. Hunt) for giving me the opportunity to speak. The House is aware of my interest in the Royal Air Force, and I will not go into that. Let me simply say that my hon. Friend the Minister should remember that Biggin Hill is the centre of excellence in selection. The world at large talks about Biggin Hill; it does not talk about the Royal Air Force officer and aircrew selection centre.

Biggin Hill is the brand name of excellence, and no commercial organisation would throw that away. Next year is the 50th anniversary of the Battle of Britain, and to throw away the brand name of excellence in the run-up to that anniversary would make no sense to me or to many others who have spent a lifetime supporting the RAF.

2.47 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Michael Neubert): It is a mark of the characteristic zeal of my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne (Mr. Hunt) that he should raise the question of Biggin Hill. I know that he has been seeking the opportunity to do so for a long time, and I congratulate him on his success in initiating this short debate. I have known him for longer than anyone else in politics, and I can say that his reputation as a campaigning constituency Member of Parliament is unrivalled and thoroughly deserved.

I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne for raising this issue today. The name of RAF Biggin Hill occupies a lasting and memorable place in the annals of our recent history, reflecting the brave spirit of defiance shown by members of the Royal Air Force who, facing great odds, fought and won for us the Battle of Britain in the dark days of 1940. I know that many people in my hon. Friend's constituency, Members of the House and former service men from both this country and abroad who have been in one way or another associated with RAF Biggin Hill, feel a great deal of sadness that the station is finally to close as an active Royal Air Force location, particularly —as my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) mentioned—as we prepare to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Battle of Britain next year.

As a former mayor of Bromley and leader of the council, and having spent my boyhood at Leaves Green very close to RAF Biggin Hill, I share those feelings of regret, but it is important that we look to the future as well as the past. I am grateful for the opportunity to set out, in response to the excellent case made by my hon. Friend, some of the reasons why the RAF officer and air crew selection centre is to move—in about four years' time—from Biggin Hill to RAF Cranwell in Lincolnshire.

It would be helpful, to put the matter in full perspective, if I were to give the House some of the wider history of RAF Biggin Hill. This really began in 1917 when it was established as part of the inner patrol zone of the London defence area. During both world wars it played a major part in the defence of London. Originally the station was a base for Bristol fighters which operated at night against German air raids in the last year of the first world war. During 1918, the station was used for experimental work on wireless communication between the ground and aircraft in flight, and by the end of the war movements of the home defence squadrons in the air were being controlled through the transmitter at Biggin Hill.

In 1938, the station was again used for experimental work, in connection with the interception of hostile aircraft, under the direction of Air Marshal Sir Hugh Dowding and Professor Watson Watt. At the outbreak of the second world war, Biggin Hill was home to Nos. 32 and 79 squadrons, both equipped with Hurricanes, and No. 601 squadron equipped with Blenheims. On 29 November 1939, aircraft from 601 squadron, together with others from 25 squadrons, attacked the Borkum seaplane base. However, it was during the Battle of Britain, when its squadrons were engaged in some of the fiercest fighting of those critical three months, that the name of the station became famous. It shared with RAF Hornchurch the doubtful distinction of being the most frequently bombed airfield in Fighter Command.

Most famous squadrons operated from Biggin Hill during the Battle of Britain. Amongst the many famous pilots who flew with them were Group Captain Rankin, Group Captain Green, Wing Commander Kent, Wing Commander Stanford Tuck and Squadron Leader Neville Duke, later to become the well-known test pilot. In 1944, squadrons in the Biggin Hill sector began to escort light bombers of the Tactical Air Force to bomb the French railway system in preparation for the forthcoming landings in Normandy. Later that year, Spitfires of different squadrons provided air cover for Lancasters bombing the dykes on Walcheren Island, the key to the port of Antwerp.

After the second world war RAF Biggin Hill continued as a fighter station, and Nos. 600 and 615 Royal Auxiliary Air Force squadrons, and later a regular squadron, No. 41 squadron, operated from there. But in January 1958 RAF Biggin Hill became non-operational, although the University of London Air Squadron remained there, and No. 61 Group Communications Flight moved there in March 1958. However, on 7 February 1959, more than 30 years ago, all Royal Air Force flying from the station finally ceased.

While the RAF retained some working and domestic accommodation, the actual airfield at RAF Biggin Hill was transferred from the RAF to the Ministry of Aviation in 1964, and later sold to the London borough of Bromley in 1974. I remember, as mayor, presiding over the council meeting which decided to purchase Biggin Hill. Since then, civil flying has continued very successfully from the airfield, and this weekend the annual international air show, which has become a prominent part of flying activities from Biggin Hill, is to be held, with the planned participation of the RAF's Red Arrows. I am sure that this important and prestigious event will once again prove to be a resounding success, and will continue well into the future, keeping the name of Biggin Hill before an appreciative public.

In April 1959 with the cessation of flying operations the Ground Officers Selection Centre was transferred to Biggin Hill from Uxbridge, and in April 1962 the officers and aircrew selection centre formed at RAF Biggin Hill and took on the tasks previously performed by the ground officers' selection centre at Biggin Hill and the aircrew selection centre at RAF Hornchurch, thus illustrating the nature of change over the years. Since it was established, the selection centre has done an excellent job in helping the Royal Air Force to choose young men and women to join its ranks, and I would like to pay tribute to all those who have worked and continue to work at the OASC. However, after more than 20 years it has become increasingly apparent that with the changes which the Royal Air Force is facing to keep abreast of modern developments, and the introduction of major new aircraft types such as Tornado and the European fighter aircraft, the centre not only needs to be part of a larger establishment than Biggin Hill can provide, but also needs to share in the spirit and atmosphere of the modern Air Force, to provide potential recruits with a realistic flavour of life in the service today. We have therefore decided that it should move to RAF Cranwell, where it will become a part of the wider activities of the RAF college in an environment that is well suited to its task, alongside an active military airfield.

Various alternative locations for the selection centre were considered before RAF Cranwell was chosen as the most appropriate new site. Apart from financial aspects, a range of other factors was taken into account, including accessibility and ease of travel to the centre for candidates. Examination of the points of origin of candidates showed that a more northerly location than Biggin Hill would be fully justified, and good transport links to Cranwell, which is easily reached by road, bus or train, will make travelling to the centre after relocation simple and convenient. The RAF is prepared to provide a transport service to the nearest railway station, at Grantham. There are of course already many visitors to the RAF college at Cranwell.

This decision has been taken as part of a wider and continuing initiative to keep under review the estate holdings and deployment of the Royal Air Force, and to ensure that the most cost-effective use is made of the resources available to the service. The selection centre is now the only unit based at Biggin Hill, and to maintain its presence it requires a considerable administrative "tail" in supporting functions such as catering, motor transport and supply. By transferring the selection centre to the much larger station at RAF Cranwell, where the administration wing alone is larger than Biggin Hill's total complement, we shall reap economies of scale to correct that imbalance. Cranwell will be able to absorb the OASC with only a small increase in its own support establishment. We will thus be able to save about 113 service and 19 civilian posts and secure running cost savings of more than £2 million a year once the move is complete. Some new building will be required at RAF Cranwell, but income from disposing of most of the existing real estate at Biggin Hill, including a large number of married quarters, will be more than adequate to compensate for the new facilities needed. I shall keep these factors under review in the years ahead, but I can offer my hon. Friends no prospect of the equation changing in their favour. Indeed, we expect an ample margin of funds from disposal to be available for investment elsewhere, assisting in the process of adjusting the size and shape of the defence estate to meet the challenges that the services must face into the next century.

To revert to this century and the earlier history of the station, to commemorate all the aircrew who died while serving in the Biggin Hill sector during the war, St. George's chapel of remembrance was established at the station. The present chapel is the second on the site, the first having been dedicated on 19 September 1943, some months after the sector had received confirmation of the destruction of its 1,000th enemy aircraft. Unfortunately, the first chapel was completely destroyed by fire in 1946. An appeal was then launched with the endorsement of Sir Winston Churchill to erect a permanent shrine of remembrance at the station. Air Chief Marshal Lord Dowding laid the foundation stone of a new building in July 1951, and the Lord Bishop of Rochester dedicated the chapel on 10 November 1951, since when it has been in full use as a Royal Air Force church.

In recognition of the historical importance of Biggin Hill, we intend to retain and maintain, as a Royal Air Force responsibility, St. George's memorial chapel, along with Hurricane and Spitfire gate guardians, which reflect the past activities of the station. Arrangements will be made to ensure the chapel will be accessible to members of the public, and available for services as appropriate. This will ensure that a lasting memorial of the distinguished history of the station and the famous part it played in the Battle of Britain remains available both to those with a personal memory of, or connection with, those events and to subsequent generations, for whom that epic struggle would otherwise be only a formal entry in their history books.

Mr. John Hunt: Can my hon. Friend add to that by giving an assurance that a chaplain will be appointed?

Mr. Neubert: I shall certainly consider that point in response to my hon. Friend's plea.

I refer now to discussions with Bromley borough council concerning disposal of that part of the site that we shall not retain. Consultants have been appointed to undertake planning. My officials will continue to work closely with the borough council over the future use of Biggin Hill, and we shall be prepared to consider any suggestions for possible development, including aviation use.

The selection centre employs 89 service and 40 civilian personnel. For those civilians without an obligation to move with the centre, every endeavour will be made between now and the time that the move takes place to find them alternative employment, whether in the Ministry of Defence or in other Government Departments. However, at this stage the possibility of some redundancies cannot be ruled out. All staff in both mobile and non-mobile grades will be interviewed at an appropriate time by civilian management authorities to consider the possibility of future employment. Should redundancies eventually prove necessary, I shall ensure that all staff involved are given appropriate periods of notice. As to recruiting new staff needed at Cranwell, our studies have shown that the relatively small numbers involved will not present any difficulty.

As my hon. Friend said, there is an active and thriving air training corps squadron at Biggin Hill, and my predecessor, the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman), made it clear that that squadron will be able to continue providing training for local young people, which fosters a practical interest in aviation and develops qualities of leadership and of good citizenship. A planning group is currently considering in detail how the squadron's needs will best be met following the move of the selection centre. I assure the House that we consider it very important to preserve the ability of the squadron to discharge its constructive and worthwhile task and that appropriate arrangements will be made to ensure that that continues.

Biggin Hill also provides support or parenting to a number of other ATC squadrons and combined cadet force sections in the south-east. That function will be transferred to other RAF stations in the area, and arrangements are already in hand for RAF Uxbridge to take responsibility for CCF sections.

In addition to selection procedures for potential RAF officer and aircrew recruits, the centre undertakes aptitude testing of aircrew candidates for the two other services and medical examinations of Army candidates. Following the centre's transfer, facilities will continue to be offered to the other two services who have been fully involved in preparations for the move.

As I said, I personally feel deeply the regret shared by many others that RAF Biggin Hill is soon to close after such an illustrious history, but there have been many far-reaching changes since those early days of 1917. Today, the RAF operates aircraft that would be unrecognisable to pioneers of military aviation. I am sure that the officer and aircrew selection centre will continue to uphold the very best traditions of the RAF following its move—and what better place than the Royal Air Force college, Cranwell, the home and heart of the RAF, for it to carry on its work. Similarly, I am sure that the name Biggin Hill——

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

Adjourned at one minute past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 6 June 1989

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Attorney-General whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by the Lord Chancellor's Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Such devices are not used by the Lord Chancellor's Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf.

Legal Reform

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will list the meetings which the Law Officers and the Lord Chancellor have had with representatives of the legal profession to discuss the Green Papers; and what further meetings are planned.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers have frequent meetings with representatives of the legal profession at which a variety of topics, which may include the Green Papers, are discussed.

Liverpool Law Circuit

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Attorney-General what action is being taken to deal with complaints about the Liverpool law circuit; if he will undertake an investigation into procedures on the Liverpool circuit; if he will consider suspending the circuit administrator; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: A number of complaints about delays in the county court at both Birkenhead and Liverpool have been made. The position at Birkenhead has improved over the past few months and a more satisfactory service is now being provided. At Liverpool difficulties have been experienced, due in part to shortages at junior staff levels and extra staffing resources are being made available in order to provide some immediate relief. A thorough appraisal is also being carried out with a view to strengthening the management structure. There is no intention to suspend the circuit administrator.

WALES

Mid Wales Development Board

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total expenditure of the Mid Wales Development Board in each of the years June 1978 to June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is not possible to provide the information in the form requested. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my predecessor to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 23 February 1987 at columns 8-10 and to the recently published Welsh Office "Commentary on Public Expenditure in Wales 1989-90 to 1991-92" (Table 23), which provides details of the Development Board for Rural Wales' gross expenditure for the financial years 1977-78 onwards.

General Practitioners

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from general practitioners in Wales about the proposed changes in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We have received a number of representations from GPs and their representatives. We shall be considering them, along with the views expressed during a series of meetings which we and our senior officials are holding with a wide range of interested bodies, before finalising the proposals.

Inward Investment

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to ensure that inward investment in Wales is evenly spread between all regions of Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Potential inward investors are encouraged to consider all parts of Wales for their projects. Welsh Development International has regional executives to effect this policy and liaise with local authorities and other bodies to ensure a co-ordinated response to inquiries. In Mid Wales, the co-ordinating role is undertaken by an official of Mid Wales Development who also acts as the area's direct contact point with Welsh Development International. In addition, initiatives have been taken, or are under consideration, for promoting particular areas such as Swansea bay and Gwynedd.

I am confident that the stronger framework provided by the launch of Welsh Development International will ensure that all of Wales benefits from the inward investment drive, though the choice of location for each project will ultimately always reflect the commercial judgment of the enterprise concerned.

Airports

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on bringing into operation local airports in (a) Aberystwyth, (b) Anglesey, RAF Valley and (c) RAF Brawdy in order to facilitate quick access to European business centres via Birmingham, Cardiff, Manchester and London.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Airport facilities serving south-west and north-west Wales already exist at Haverfordwest (Withybush) and Caernarfon. There is also a helicopter facility at Aberporth. A privately owned airstrip will soon be in operation at Welshpool. Proposals to develop these facilities or open further airports would be matters for the civil aviation industry in the first instance.

North-South Road

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for constructing a new north-south Wales road before the end of the century.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My plans for selective improvements to north-south routes in Wales are set out in "Roads in Wales 1989".

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the inflation-adjusted expenditure on different categories of roads in Wales has been for each year between 1975 and 1988.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

	Motorways and trunk roads £'000	Local authority roads £'000
1975-76	146,670	208,378
1976-77	204,977	241,529
1977-78	138,451	226,230
1978-79	128,906	215,970
1979-80	125,938	192,138
1980-81	120,841	169,451
1981-82	150,923	216,530
1982-83	160,826	227,418
1983-84	197,264	222,545
1984-85	138,420	215,794
1985-86	125,646	219,762
1986-87	133,051	214,577
1987-88	145,333	[1]230,468
1988-89	[2]153,895	[2]195,935

[1] Estimate.
[2] Budget.
[3] Does not include EC receipts of £9.0 million.
Note: All figures at 1988 prices, up-dated using the road construction price index.

M54

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to extend the M54 to Welshpool or Newtown.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No, but there are substantial improvements in preparation to trunk roads on both sides of the border as indicated in "Roads in Wales 1989" and in "Policy for Roads in England 1987".

North, Central and South Rail Link

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has made any representations to British Rail about the case for constructing a new railway linking north, central and south Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

Railway Electrification

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make representations to British Rail about the case for electrifying railways from England to (a) Holyhead, (b) Aberystwyth and (c) Pembroke and Fishguard harbour.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for British Rail.

Community Charge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now consider reimbursing local authorities with an additional £3 million to meet the cost of introducing the poll tax.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend made it clear at the time that the terms of the 1989-90 RSG settlement were fixed, and that remains the position. Under the settlement, the total revenue provision made in 1989-90 for the implementation of the community charge in Wales was £9 million. Local authorities are budgeting to spend £10·9 million. Capital allocations of £10·3 million were given and local authorities are budgeting to spend £9·1 million. These are budget estimates and it is too early to form a judgment on the level of actual expenditure which might be incurred. I have made it clear to local authorities in Wales that overall spending should not exceed the Government's plans.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest available figures for people waiting for urgent in-patient treatment in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport; and what were the figures in 1979.

Mr. Grist: The available information is given in the following table.

	People waiting for urgent in-patient treatment as at 30 September
	1980[1]	1988
Wales	4,240	2,887
Gwent	1,212	855
Newport[2]	778	428

[1] Reliable information in this form is not available prior to this date.
[2] People waiting for treatment at royal Gwent and St. Woolos hospitals.

I welcome the substantial improvement and hope it will continue.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the latest available figures for non-urgent cases waiting for one month or more in each of the Welsh health authorities; and what were the figures for 1979;

(2) what are the latest available figures for urgent cases waiting one month or more in each of the Welsh health authorities; and what were the figures for 1979.

Mr. Grist: The available information on in-patient waiting lists is given in the following table. Information on non-urgent cases is collected on the basis of the number waiting for one year or more.

	Urgent cases waiting one month or more as at 30 September		Non-urgent cases waiting one year or more as at 30 September
	1980[1]	1988	1980[1]	1988

South Glamorgan	842	466	1,666	1,767
West Glamorgan	350	181	790	988

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to reduce the non-urgent hospital waiting lists in Gwent.

Mr. Grist: Responsibility for the management of waiting lists in Wales rests with district health authorities, within their allocated financial resources. The recurrent revenue provision for Gwent health authority for 1989-90 is some £127 million which represents a growth of 34 per cent. over 1978-79 after taking account of inflation. In order to reduce waiting times £1 million of additional moneys were allocated to health authorities by the Welsh Office in each of the last three years to enable them to tackle specific problem lists. A further £1·1 million has recently been made available for 1989-90 of which Gwent's share is £220,000 to fund a scheme to reduce trauma and orthopaedics waiting times in south Gwent. In addition, all health authorities have produced action plans for reducing waiting times and officials of the Welsh Office will be kept in touch with the position through six-monthly reports from authorities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nerds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take following the finding of glass in Nerds sweets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Reports reached Government Departments in the afternoon of 23 May. Following discussions and the receipt of more information, the company decided in the interests of consumers to withdraw stocks of the product from sale on the following day.

Agricultural Development Programmes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many agricultural development programmes are operating in (a) the three counties of Yorkshire, and (b) Humberside; where are the locations; what is the total value of grants made to farmers under these schemes; and what is the source of these funds.

Mr. Ryder: Agricultural development programmes may be part funded by the Commission of the European Communities under article 18 of Regulation 797/85, the balance of the costs being found from national and local resources. There are none in operation in England and Wales.

New rules established at the end of 1988 enabled the Commission to designate "rural areas" the development of which need promotion and may be assisted financially under all three of the Community's structural funds. The Commission announced the first list of such areas on 10 May: none were in Yorkshire or Humberside.

Fishing (Aid)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many grants have been given to members of (a) the Yorkshire, and (b) the Humberside fishing industry under the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund scheme from May 1979 to May 1989; and how many new vessels were built with those grants;

(2) how much financial aid has been given to the fishing industry in (a) Yorkshire, and (b) Humberside under the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund scheme since May 1979 to date;

(3) if he will list the projects in the fish processing industry for (a) Yorkshire and (b) Humberside, which received European Community grant aid in the period May 1979 to May 1989 and the total value of grants given to each product;

(4) in the period May 1979 to May 1989 (a) how many owners of fishing vessels in (i) Yorkshire and (ii) Humberside, received grant aid or the modernisation programme; and what was the total value of these grants, and (b) what was the total value of grand aid give to (i) the Yorkshire, and (ii) the Humberside fishing industry for building of new fishing vessels.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The financial aid available to these regions consists of national and EC grants for fishing vessel construction and modernisation and grants for processing and marketing schemes under EEC regulation 355/77.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total value of loans made to (a) the Yorkshire, and (b) the Humberside fishing industry from the Sea Fish Industry Authority in the period May 1979 to May 1989; and how many vessels these loans covered.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

SFIA Loans 1979-1989

	Number of Vessels	Amount £
Yorkshire	12	597,194
Humberside	Nil	Nil

Note: SFIA loans ceased to be available after June 1986.

Farmers (Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the total values of payments made to farmers in (a) the three counties of Yorkshire and (b) Humberside for the sheepmeat regime since 1979; and how much of this was from (a) the European Community and (b) central Government in the period May 1979 to May 1989.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Farmers in Great Britain have received support since 1980 under the EC sheepmeat regime through both the sheep variable premium and the annual ewe premium. Both schemes are 100 per cent. financed from European Community funds. A breakdown of payments since 1979 is not available in the form requested by the hon. Member.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the total values of payments made to farmers in (a) the three counties of Yorkshire and (b) Humberside for the beef premium in the period from May 1979 to May 1989; and how much of this was funded (i) from the European Community and (ii) from central Government.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The beef variable premium scheme operated throughout the period mentioned until it ceased at the beginning of April 1989. Funding from the European Community was at 25 per cent. until 19 May 1982 and at 40 per cent. thereafter.

The beef suckler cow premium was introduced in 1980 and continues. It was fully funded by the European Community for the first two years and has been partly funded at varying rates since then.

Statistics are not maintained in a form to provide the information on a county basis as requested by the hon. Member.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total complement of (a) the Yorkshire and (b) the Humberside fishing fleets; what are the categories of vessels; how many fishermen are employed in the industry; where are the home ports of the vessels, for the latest year for which figures are available, and what were the figures 10 years ago.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

Fish Landings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total values of all fish landings in Yorkshire and Humberside for each year for the last 10 years to date for the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total values of all fish landings by United Kingdom and foreign vessels in Yorkshire and Humberside for the last 10 years and for January to April 1989 are as follows:

Artificial Insemination

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will confine restrictions on artificial insemination services exclusively to those required for reasons of animal health.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes, subject to the constraints of Community zootechnical legislation.

Salmonella

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many poultry flocks and how many birds, have been slaughtered since the signing of the Zoonoses Order 1989;

(2) what compensation has been paid to poultry farmers affected by the slaughter of their flocks subsequent to the signing of the Zoonoses Order 1989.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since the introduction of the Zoonoses order on 1 March, 25 poultry flocks and 338,963 birds have been slaughtered at a cost of £261,163·76p. In addition 6,333 diagnostic samples have been taken from 45 flocks at a cost of £10,459·79p.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many random inspections have been carried out by his Department to ensure that the terms of the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989 are being fully and correctly complied with;

(2) on how many occasions poultry farmers have been detected failing to comply fully and correctly with the provisions of the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989; and what action his Department has taken;

(3) what evidence his Department had uncovered of the falsification of specified samples as required under the provisions of the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989; on how many occasions; and what action his Department has taken;

(4) what system of checks his Department has put in place to verify that poultry farmers are supplying full and accurate information in compliance with the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Responsibility for enforcement of the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989 lies with local authorities. As the measure has been in force only since 16 March, and as measures for the registration of poultry flocks are not yet in place, it would be premature to reach a judgment on the extent of compliance. At this early stage, poultry farmers and enforcement authorities are still in the process of introducing the necessary procedures and my Department is providing advice and guidance as necessary.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the evidence available on the extent of salmonella infection in the laying flocks of the United Kingdom and other EEC countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There have been 35 reports of isolation of salmonella enteritidis in table egg-laying flocks in the United Kingdom so far this year. We have no information on the number of cases reported in other EC countries but know that salmonella infection has been identified in Spain, Portugal, France, the Netherlands, Belgium, West Germany and Denmark.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his European colleagues to ensure standard checking for salmonella infection in eggs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 4 April at column 51, the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 20 April at column 280 and my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 25 April at column 492.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that all eggs imported into the United Kingdom are subject to the same examination for salmonella infection as those produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 20 April at column 280.

Flood Defences (Thames Estuary)

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what detailed information he has on the maintenance work done by the Anglian Water Authority on the flood barriers and flood gates in the Thames estuary, with particular reference to the area from Southend-on-Sea to Purfleet in each of the last five years; and whether he is satisfied with the authority's standards of maintenance.

Mr. Ryder: Maintenance of the flood gates and barriers in the Southend-on-Sea to Purfleet areas of the Thames estuary is a matter for the National Rivers Authority unit of Anglian water authority. Anglian gives high priority to effective and reliable operation of these gates and barriers and sets standards of maintenance accordingly. The gates and barriers are in any case of "fail safe" design and current overhaul work on barrier machinery is to be completed before the surge tide season commences next autumn.

I am satisfied that the authority's arrangements are satisfactory.

BSE

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any tests exist to diagnose the presence of scrapie or bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected material in animal feed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no test available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 375, when he first introduced recording procedures in respect of the progeny of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle; how such recording takes place; and how many such progeny have so far been recorded in each year of the scheme's operation.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The collection and recording of data from all affected herds commenced in June 1987 and included details of all previously known cases. The Ministry's central veterinary laboratory holds computerised records of female progeny born up to six months before or at any time after the onset of clinical symptoms of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the dam and which are being retained in their herds of origin. Up to 9 May 1989 details of 562 such progeny had been recorded. Details of the years in which they were recorded are not held as the information is of no epidemiological value.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 375, under what provision he has taken power to control the movement of progeny from bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Powers to control the movement of progeny are provided by article 7 of the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (No. 2) Order 1988, which is made under section 8 of the Animal Health Act 1981.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence his Department has concerning the relative concentration level of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy agent in the brains, spinal columns and thymus of infected animals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Proposals for research into this area are currently being considered by Dr. Tyrrell's research consultative committee.

Animal Test Certificate (Pharmaceutical Products)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those pharmaceutical products being tested in 1988 under an animal test certificate under the Medicines Act which were subject to conditions banning the ultimate animal product from sale to the public.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Animal test certificates granted under the Medicines Act 1968 authorise field trials to be carried for the purpose of medicinal tests on animals. Such certificates are granted for two years and are renewable. Trials may not be in progress under all certificates at any one time and it would not be possible to identify products undergoing testing during any specific period.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances he bans from sale for human consumption products from animals subject to trials of pharmaceutical products under an animal test certificate.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Before an animal test certificate is granted all aspects relating to the safety of the product to be tested are rigorously assessed. In this assessment consideration is given to the safety to consumers of produce from treated animals. If this cannot be assured by a suitable withdrawal period then it would be made a condition of the certificate that treated animals or produce from treated animals should not be sold or supplied for human consumption.

Nitrate-sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the area in hectacres which he assesses merits consideration for inclusion in a nitrate-sensitive areas scheme, and the level of funding he intends to allocate to the scheme in its first year.

Mr. Ryder: I am seeking the views of interested parties on all aspects of the nitrate-sensitive areas scheme including potential areas and compensation arrangements and I will make a further announcement when those consultations have been completed. I reassure the hon. Member that the Government have undertaken to pay compensation in the event of substantial restrictions going beyond good agricultural practice.

Hydatid Disease

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the incidence of hydatid diseases; what action he is currently taking to monitor the disease; and what research his Department is conducting or funding into it.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Hydatid (tapeworm) infestation is not notifiable but slaughterhouse monitoring suggests that, nationally, about 3 per cent. of sheep may be affected, although the problem is greater in Wales, particularly in Powys. The condition results from the ingestion by sheep of the eggs of the dog tapeworm by direct transfer from dog faeces or through contaminated food or water. The Ministry, in conjunction with the Welsh Office Agriculture Department, has undertaken a six-year control programme in Powys in which all dogs have been de-wormed at six-week intervals free of charge. This has resulted in a significant reduction of hydatid infestation. The Department is not currently funding research into hydatid.

Sheepmeat Regime

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate his timetable for the introduction of a new sheepmeat regime; and what prior discussions with farmers he will be having in this connection.

Mr. Ryder: Discussions on the EC Commission's proposals for changes to the sheepmeat regime have made little progress. Negotiations may therefore continue for some time. My officials and I shall continue to maintain regular contacts with representatives of farmers throughout these negotiations.

Agricultural Statistics Act 1979

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in view of the repetitious nature of the information required from farmers and horticulturalists by virtue of the Agricultural Statistics Act 1979, he will arrange for such returns in future to be on an annual or biennial basis.

Mr. Ryder: Most of the information required under the Agricultural Statistics Act 1979 is collected annually, in the June agricultural census. This covers farm holdings above a specified threshold size and results in a wide range of statistical data which are necessary for Government purposes and are also much valued by the industry. Twenty per cent. of holdings are smaller, and are enumerated only every five years or so.

Information on some items is also collected at other points in the year, to meet particular needs, but normally only from a sample of farmers. The need for statistical surveys, their content and their frequency are kept under regular review.

Untreated Milk

Mr. Waller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available to him about the legal position relating to the supply of untreated milk in each European Community member state.

Mr. MacGregor: Detailed information is not readily available but I am aware that other member states impose various restrictions on the sale of untreated milk and I understand that in Denmark sales are prohibited with the exception of sales from one small family dairy in North Zealand.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) of 25 May, Official Report, column 1111 if he will make it his policy to extend consumer freedom of choice by abandoning plans to outlaw the sale of green top milk to the general public.

Mr. MacGregor: I have nothing to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) on 25 May at columns 735-36.

Milk (Bovine Somatotropin)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 25 May, Official Report, column 1111, whether he will also make it his policy to require milk treated with bovine somatotropin to be labelled before going on sale to the general public.

Mr. Ryder: No. I fully recognise the need for consumers to be given adequate information to enable them to make an informed choice. However, the BST hormone occurs naturally in milk and it is not possible to distinguish between the natural hormone in the milk and that induced by the treatment of the cow with BST, since the detectable levels of the hormone in the milk are within the same range in both cases.

Food Quality and Safety

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received urging that the responsibility for food quality and safety be removed from the auspices of the Ministry of Agriculture; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: There is a firm link between agricultural production and the rest of the food chain, and therefore sense and logic in having the whole of the food chain within the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. This enables policy changes to be assessed for the whole of the food chain rather than just part of it for which it might have direct responsibility. I do not think that there is any evidence to suggest that the Ministry does not give sufficient emphasis to the health implications of food. Indeed our overriding concern is that the food supply should be safe, wholesome and properly labelled.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Regional Pay

13. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of Education and Science whether he will make a statement about the introduction of regional pay in schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I shall shortly be holding further meetings with the employers and the teaching unions to discuss future pay determination arrangements.

Teachers (Recruitment)

15. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the recruitment of former teachers back to the classroom.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are already very successful in recruiting former teachers: over 50 per cent. of new appointments in the four years up to March 1987 were taken up by former teachers. But we are increasing our efforts and have recently announced a new £2 million education support grant programme to support measures to support returners. I look to authorities to come up with imaginative schemes aimed at women in particular, which might include child care facilities and more flexible employment arrangements, such as part-time working and job sharing.

26. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures he has available as regards science and mathematics graduates going into teaching; and what are the corresponding figures for five years ago.

Mr. Butcher: In the year ending March 1986 (the latest for which figures are available) the numbers of new entrants to teaching in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England with degrees (including B Eds) in science and mathematics were 1,710 and 860 respectively. The corresponding figures for the year ending March 1981 were 2,040 and 800.

37. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he is making in meeting the problem of potential teacher shortages in certain subject areas.

Mr. Butcher: Since our action programme was launched nearly three years ago the decline in recruitment to teaching in the shortage subjects which we witnessed up to 1986 has been reversed. We shall continue and reinforce our action programme to ensure that we have the well-qualified teachers that we shall need in our schools in the 1990s.

Student Unions

16. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received recently on the funding of student unions.

Mr. Jackson: Since April 1988 we have received 44 letters commenting on the funding of institutional student unions. Thirty two questioned the present system.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's review of student unions.

Mr. Jackson: We plan shortly to publish the factual analysis of the Department's survey of student unions. We are considering separately what action might best be taken and in due course will consult all those concerned on our conclusions.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing automatic membership of student unions; what percentage the latter represents of the former; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Since April 1988 we have received 55 letters expressing a view on automatic membership of institutional student unions. Of these, 20 (36·4 per cent.) supported and 35 (63·6 per cent.) were against automatic membership.

National Curriculum

17. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the state of preparations for the introduction of the national core curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Preparations are well in hand. Statutory orders for mathematics, science and English have been laid; the National Curriculum Council has distributed guidance and training materials free; and LEAs' training programmes, supported by Government specific grants, are under way.

30. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement concerning the provision of mother tongue teaching under the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend laid on 19 May the Education (National Curriculum) (Modern Foreign Languages) Order 1989 which specifies those languages eligible to be taught as the national curriculum foundation subject. The order includes the mother tongue languages of some ethnic communities in this country. A school would be able to offer any of these languages towards the national curriculum requirements, provided that it also offered at least one of the European Community working languages. Pupils would choose one modern foreign language from those offered by the school.

38. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that teachers are fully prepared to implement the national curriculum in primary schools next term.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

42. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to ensure that adequate resources will be available to ensure full access to the national curriculum for children with special educational needs, where appropriate.

Mr. Butcher: The Government are making specific grants available to local education authorities to support the introduction of the national curriculum. In this financial year, there will be support for over £100 million expenditure. It is for authorities to decide how much to spend within this total in order to ensure full access to the national curriculum for children with special educational needs, where appropriate.

Careers Education

14. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any discussions with local authority associations with regard to careers education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has not done so recently but he and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Employment and for Wales have promoted the widest collaboration in careers education and guidance through the "Working Together" initiative which they launched two years ago.

18. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given in the current year to secondary schools with regard to careers education.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery).

Higher Education

19. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the case for widening access to higher education.

Mr. Jackson: Many of the large number of representations we receive on higher education matters explicitly favour wider access, as do the Government.

Dyslexia

20. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to review the identification and educational treatment of dyslexia in school pupils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: It is for individual local education authorities in the exercise of their statutory duties under the 1981 Education Act to make provision for the identification of children with special educational needs and the provision of appropriate education to meet their needs. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to amend these statutory procedures.

Pupil Testing

21. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has to report on his plans for testing at age seven; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Contracts have been let for the development of standard assessment tasks in the core subjects and technology for seven-year-old pupils. Work has already begun to develop, trial and pilot these SATs in preparation for the first unreported assessments in summer 1991. The first reported assessments will take place in summer 1992. Assessment arrangements for other foundation subjects will be phased in later.

45. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his progress in implementing a system of testing for pupils at ages seven, 11 and 14 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum system of testing rests on the establishment, for each foundation subject, of programmes of study and attainment targets. These will be introduced for mathematics and science for five and 11-year-olds, and for English for five-year-olds, this autumn. Those pupils will be assessed in these subjects on a trial basis when they reach the ages of seven and 14 respectively in 1991 and 1992, and on a reported basis in subsequent years. Contracts have already been let for the development of standard assessment tasks for seven-year-olds and bids for SATs for 14-year-olds are under consideration. Assessment arrangements in these subjects for 11 and 16-year-olds and in other subjects at each age will be phased in over succeeding years.

Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals

22. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals; and what he discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I meet representatives of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals from time to time in the course of normal business.

Student Loans

23. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his plans to introduce top-up loans for students.

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on his proposal to introduce student loans.

41. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the response of the financial institutions to his White Paper on student loans.

44. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implementation of his White Paper on student loans.

48. Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implementation of his White Paper on student loans.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) and my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

31. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the representations he has received from Scottish universities regarding his White Paper on student loans.

46. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the representations he has received from Scottish universities regarding his White Paper on student loans.

Mr. Jackson: We have received responses to the White Paper from each of the Scottish universities or their student bodies, and from the Standing Conference of the Universities of Scotland. They are being taken into account, along with all other responses, as we proceed to develop a scheme for the introduction of top-up loans.

Careers Education

24. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has issued advice to careers departments in secondary schools in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Her Majesty's Inspectorate published "Careers education and guidance from 5 to 16" in its "Curriculum Matters" series last year. This has informed local education authorities and schools, and authorities drew upon it when preparing the statements of future policy which they submitted recently to my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Language Study

25. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any proposals to increase the number of Russian language assistants currently in secondary schools.

Mr. Jackson: The programme of co-operation in the scientific, educational and cultural fields between the United Kingdom and the USSR for 1989-1991 provides for the number of Russian language assistants currently in the United Kingdom to be increased to a maximum of six a year from academic year 1989-90.

29. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to enable schools to take advantage of opportunities provided by the European Community of other member nations in assisting the teaching in their schools of languages that are currently unavailable to schools in England and Wales.

35. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to enable schools to take advantage of opportunities provided by the European Community for other member nations in assisting the teaching in their schools of languages that are presently unavailable to schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is not aware that there are opportunities relating to the teaching of languages in schools provided by the European Community that are available to schools in the other members states but not in England and Wales. He informed the House on 24 May of the agreement on 22 May over the terms of the Community's Lingua programme. The programme is concerned with the support for the improvement of foreign language competence through initial and continuing vocational education. This includes the training of foreign language teachers in schools in the United Kingdom as in other member states and our schools will benefit in equal measure.

47. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage secondary school pupils to study two modern languages.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum will include a modern foreign language as a foundation subject at secondary level to be studied by all pupils between the ages of 11 and 16. From this autumn, pupils will have to study a modern foreign language for a reasonable time in the first three years of secondary schooling. This requirement will be extended to the last two years of compulsory schooling later. Schools will be free to offer a second foreign language during the 11-16 phase or in the sixth form, in addition to meeting the national curriculum requirements. This reflects the Government's policy on modern foreign languages in the school curriculum which was set out in my right hon. Friend's policy statement "Modern Languages in the School Curriculum" published in January 1988.

Morris Report

33. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Morris report on research councils' responsibilities for biological sciences.

Mr. Jackson: This report was commissioned by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils in June 1988 and Mr. Morris presented his report to the board at the end of April. The board is now seeking the views of the research councils on the report before submitting detailed advice to my right hon. Friend later in the year. In the meantime the chairman of the board has sent the report to my right hon. Friend and a copy has been placed in the Library. He would not wish to comment on the report until he has had the opportunity to consider the board's advice.

School Governors

34. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress his Department has made in encouraging parents to become school governors.

36. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of schools which have established governing bodies containing parent governors as required by the Education Reform Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: A recent survey for the Department suggests that more than 99 per cent. of parent governor places at county and maintained special schools have been filled.

Parents

39. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans for providing education or training for parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The committee of inquiry into discipline in schools has recommended that the Government should develop a post-school education strategy aimed at promoting socially responsible parenthood. I am considering this recommendation.

Teacher Training

40. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the initial teacher training course at the faculty of education at University College, Cardiff.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received several representations at the faculty of education at what is now the University of Wales College of Cardiff.

Capital Programme (Cornwall)

43. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the capital programme for schools in Cornwall.

Mr. Butcher: My hon. Friend the Minister of State discussed the 1989-90 capital allocation with a deputation from the Cornwall education committee whom she saw during her visit to the county on 12 April. A number of hon. Members, the chief education officer of the authority and members of the public have written to Ministers on this subject.

City and Guilds Institute

49. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Secretary of State last met the general secretary of the City and Guilds Institute; and what was discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend last met the Director General of the City and Guilds of London Institute on 17 November 1987. A range of vocational education issues were discussed with the chairman and senior members of CGLI. Opportunities have arisen since that time for a number of informal discussions with both the Secretary of State and myself.

My right hon. Friend has a meeting arranged with the chairman and Director General of CGLI for 14 June when he intends both to review the achievements of CGLI and discuss the initiatives suggested in his speech to the Association for Colleges of Further and Higher Education on 15 February 1989.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update the figures of participants in the MRC/INSERM trial of zidovudine given in reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 22 February, Official Report, column 636.

Mr. Jackson: The number of participants enrolled in the MRC/INSERM trial of zidovudine up to 26 May 1989 was 382 in the United Kingdom and 384 in France.

Creches

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to encourage the provision of creches to attract experienced teachers with their own children back into the profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our education support grant programme for 1990-91 includes support for expenditure of £2 million on local recruitment of returners and mature new entrants to the teaching profession. We are looking for imaginative proposals from local authorities which we can support, and which might include the provision of childcare facilities for teachers' children.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Electronic surveillance listening devices are not used by the Department of Education and Science, nor by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will express the salary received by a primary school teacher at the top of scale 2 in 1973-74 in current day's prices; and what salary a primary school deputy head receives at the present day.

Mrs. Rumbold: A teacher with a good honours degree at the top of scale two in 1973-74 would have received a basic salary of £2,699. This is equal to £13,358 at April 1989 prices. The salaries of deputy head teachers vary acording to the size of the school. The deputy head of a typical (group 4) primary school now earns £16,809.

School Milk

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that all state nurseries are made aware of their right to claim reimbursement for school milk supplied to their children under the Welfare Food Regulations 1988.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no plans for an initiative of this kind.

Medical Research

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what Government funding is currently available for research into the causes and treatment of retinal conditions;

(2) what information he has concerning current research projects studying the detection and alleviation of retinal conditions.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council which receives a grant-in-aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government fund medical research in the United Kingdom. The council determines its own priorities for the support of research, with advice from its expert boards and committees. In 1987-88, the last year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £134,000 on research relevant to retinal conditions.

I understand from the MRC that one of the major current interests in research on retinal conditions, and particularly in connection with retinitis pigmentosa, relates to the genetic basis of such diseases. This is the focus of work generally at the MRC human genetics unit which is located at the western general hospital, Edinburgh. Specifically, the unit is undertaking the following studies concerning retinitis pigmentosa:

i. DNA sequence markers in single gene disorders;
ii. Mapping the x-linked retinitis pigmentosa gene with a view to the development of clinically useful probes.

Some support for research on retinal conditions may also be provided by this Department through UFC block grants to universities and medical schools.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether any public funded current or proposed research project into genetic handicap involves the use of the human embryo; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the Medical Research Council is involved in any research project into genetic handicap which necessitates the use of the human embryo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Medical Research Council is involved in research at the Hammersmith hospital on the pre-implantation diagnosis of genetic disease; and at Edinburgh and Oxford, on the development of techniques for the diagnosis of genetic handicap. There is other research concerning pre-implantation diagnosis at Bourn hall, Cambridge, on sexing of human embryos; at Hammersmith hospital, for prevention of genetic diseases; and at Oxford by the Cancer Research Campaign on derivation of cell lines from the human conceptus to investigate the growth regulation of embryonic and tumour cells.

Staff Dispersal

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to disperse staff from his Department in London to Darlington; how many staff are involved, and in what grade; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Government policy requires Departments to review the location of their work with a view to relocation where advantageous. The Department is accordingly considering whether there is scope for relocation of any of its headquarters based activities and, if so, where such activities would be best placed. Relocation of work to Darlington is amongst the options under consideration.

SCOTLAND

Actions for Debt

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will implement the recommendation of the Grant committee, Cmnd. 3248, that both actions of adjudication in implement and actions of adjudication for debt should be competent in the sheriff court.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As part of its second programme of law reform, the Scottish Law Commission has inititated consultations on proposals for the reform of the law on adjudications for debt and related matters. Its report is awaited.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the amounts of nuclear wastes, spent fuel and plutonium which will be inherited by Scottish Nuclear Ltd. from the South of Scotland Electricity Board after privatisation.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 11 May 1989 at column 429.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to issue a circular on alcohol misuse similar to circular (89)4 issued by the Department of Health on 20 February.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The circular was issued in draft on 25 May to a range of bodies who have been invited to submit comments to the Scottish Home and Health Department by 30 June.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the funding of a unit for liver transplants in Scotland; and what recent discussions have been held on such a proposal.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The national specialist services advisory committee is currently considering the need for liver transplant facilities in Scotland. Members of the committee have visited existing transplant units at Birmingham and Leeds. They have also had recent discussions with clinicians who have an interest in the provision of a liver transplant service in Scotland. When I have received the committee's advice I shall look at what needs to be done.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the remaining seven health boards to operate a computerised cervical cytology call/recall scheme for women aged 20 to 65 years at three-yearly intervals.

Mr. Rifkind: We asked health boards to establish a computerised call/recall cervical cancer screening service for all women in Scotland aged between 20 and 60 years of age at five yearly intervals. Of the five health boards which have not yet introduced a computerised system, Grampian and Shetland health boards intend to do so during July, Orkney health board during August, Dumfries and Galloway health board during September and Lothian health board during December 1989.

Hospital Consultants (Study Leave)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give for each health board for each of the past three yars the amount spent on study leave for consultants;

(2) what information he has on the number of consultants in each health board who take their full allocation of study leave.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are taken by health boards to encourage consultants to take their full allocation of study leave.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards provide financial resources to enable consultants to take study leave and boards also provide staff with information on suitable courses. The question of what study is appropriate is essentially a professional matter for the individual consultant to decide.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each of the last five years for which figures are available the amount paid to individuals in expenses for local planning appeals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from forest tree nurserymen and other forestry interests concerning the effects which the ending of schedule D reliefs for investment in forestry is having on the sale of young trees for planting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Representations on this subject have been received by my right hon. and learned Friend and by other Ministers from the Horticultural Trades Association, from six hon. Members on behalf of four nursery managers and from one nursery manager directly.

Student Fees

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will announce the fees to be charged to students attending Scottish institutions other than universities in the academic year 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For the academic year 1989-90, my right hon. and learned Friend has prescribed the following fee levels for home students and for students from other European Community (EC) countries on full-time advanced courses in the central institutions and colleges of education (fees for 1988-89 are shown in brackets):

Undergraduate and equivalent courses	607	(578)

My right hon. and learned Friend has decided that with effect from the academic year 1990-91 the fee levels he will prescribe will relate only to the maximum amounts for the reimbursement of fees through the awards system, so that the colleges will be free in practice to set fees above this level if they so wish.

For non-advanced courses, the central institutions and colleges of education will be invited to set their own fees, having regard to fees charged for comparable courses at local authority further education colleges.

Fees for home and other EC students on courses at local authority colleges are the responsibility of the local authorities. I understand that the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has decided to recommend fees for such students as follows:

Advanced full-time courses	610	(578)
Non-advanced full-time courses	502	(440)

For overseas students the Government's policy is that students should pay fees that cover the cost of their education. Local authorities and institutions are free to determine the fees to be charged in accordancee with that policy, and in the light of their own circumstances. I understand that COSLA has decided to recommend to local authorities the following fees for students at local authority colleges paying the overseas rate:

Advanced courses	4,145	(3,890)
Non-advanced courses	2,285	(2,145)

Plastic Flowers (Lennox Castle Hospital)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Greater Glasgow health board spent on plastic flowers for Lennox castle hospital in the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the financial year 1988-89 Greater Glasgow health board spent £300 on plastic flowers. The board has committed funds to improving the appearance of the wards at Lennox castle, of which I note that the hon. Member has been critical.

Dental Practice Board

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what additional costs have been incurred in the change in organisation from the Dental Estimates Board for Scotland to the Dental Practice Board; and whether he will itemise the main headings of expense;

(2) whether the change from the Dental Estimates Board for Scotland to the Dental Practice Board has been accompanied by any additional employment of personnel;

(3) whether he will list the main administrative categories of personnel in the Dental Practice Board for Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The change in the board's name to reflect its functions more accurately has not resulted in additional costs or personnel. The main administrative categories of personnel are set out below.

Whitley Council Grade	Numbers as at 1 June 1989
Grade 18	1
Grade 14	1
Grade 4	3
Executive Officer (2)	2
Grade 1	11
Higher Clerical Officer	46
Clerical Officer	75
Machine operator-typist	31
Part-time Clerical Officer	·5
Total	171·5

Dental Practitioners

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for maintaining a continuous supply of high calibre dental practitioners in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A working party was set up in October last year to consider changes in the current provision of dental education in Scotland. The working party, as part of its remit, is examining the needs of the NHS in Scotland for an adequate supply and distribution of dentists, and for effective and high quality programmes of postgraduate and continuing education. I expect its report shortly.

Community Care

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department is doing to improve community care provision in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since taking office we have increased the planning figure for local authority spending on social work services by 67 per cent. in real terms. In the current year the planning figure is £461·7 million, 13 per cent. higher than last year and 6 per cent. higher than authorities' own budgets for last year. Within these resources it is primarily for local authorities in consultation as necessary with health boards and other interests to provide levels of community care provision appropriate to their area. More specifically, the Government are studying the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care and will bring forward proposals in due course.

Concessionary Travel

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to encourage all local authorities in Scotland to introduce or extend a travel concessionary scheme to include people with mental health problems.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the terms of the Concessionary Travel for Handicapped Persons (Scotland) Act 1980 any local authority may make arrangements for the granting of travel concessions to persons suffering from mental disorders. It is, however, for the local authorities to decide what type of scheme is appropriate to their areas.

Self-governing Schools

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the information gathered on the likely change of teacher numbers resulting from his proposals for opting-out schools and their devolved budgetary power.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The recurrent grant to a self-governing school will be determined so that the school will be neither better nor worse off than it could reasonably have expected if it had remained under local authority management. The grant will thus reflect the education authority's spending on salaries, superannuation and national insurance for teachers. It will be for the board of management of each self-governing school to decide how to spend this grant and how many teachers it wishes to employ in that school.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has given to the Scottish section of the Civil Engineering Contractors regarding its objections to his paper on Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Lang: We are currently reassessing the proposals in the Scottish Enterprise White Paper in the light of all the responses received, and shall announce our detailed decisions in due course.

Community Charge

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding payment of commercial rates and the community charge by guest-house owners and bed-and-breakfast landladies in Scotland catering for more than six guests.

Mr. Lang: A number of representations have been received about the liability to non-domestic rates of properties which provide accommodation for tourists and which are also used in part as a sole or main residence. Decisions as to the value on which non-domestic rates are levied are for the assessor, subject to the appropriate appeal procedures.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the regulations covering severe weather cash aid to local authorities.

Mr. Rifkind: Special financial assistance to local authorities has been offered on an extra-statutory basis with the approval of the Treasury. Any payments due once claims have been assessed will be presented for the approval of Parliament in the form of a supplementary estimate in due course. The terms of the assistance made available were sent to every local authority in a Scottish Office circular (Finance Circular No. 6/89) dated 28 April 1989.

Bellwin Scheme

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider abolishing the minimum level for claims of £120,000 from individual local authorities under the Bellwin scheme.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no minimum level of £120,000 for claims under the Bellwin scheme of special financial assistance to local authorities. However, on all occasions when assistance under the scheme has been made available, authorities have been expected to meet an initial tranche of emergency expenditure up to a threshold set to reflect the fact that authorities have statutory powers to deal with emergencies and are expected to plan accordingly. Thresholds, based on a proportion of their penny rate, ensure that the smaller the authority the lower the threshold.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of coniferous and deciduous wasteland, respectively, were planted under the new woodland grant scheme in the first 12 months of its operation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Grants are available under the new woodland grant scheme for the rehabilitation of neglected woodlands under 20 years of age, provided they contain an adequate stocking of suitable species and have not been previously grant-aided. In the nine months of 31 March 1989, the Forestry Commission had paid such grants under the scheme in respect of four hectares of conifer woodland and 26 hectares of broadleaved woodland.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilchrist

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which media outlets were notified by the Scottish Information Office of the home visit of Mr. and Mrs. Gilchrist by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) on Sunday 14 May; and what advance notice of press involvement was given to Mr. and Mrs. Gilchrist.

Mr. Rifkind: My hon. Friend the Minister responsible for education and health did not visit the home of anyone called Gilchrist on May 14.

Electoral Registers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the percentage change in the numbers of local government electoral registers between 1988 and 1989 in the Dumbarton district.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to table 1 in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys Monitor EL 89-1, from which the percentage change may be derived. A copy of the monitor is in the Library.

Single Market

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what preparations are being made by his Department to improve communications with the continent via the south-east of England in preparation for the introduction of the single European market on 1 January 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has had meetings with the Chairman of the British Rail Board on how to ensure that Scotland benefits fully from rail links to the Channel tunnel. Section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act requires British Rail to publish a plan by the end of 1989 setting out its proposals for international rail services through the Tunnel. British Rail are consulting widely with interested parties in the regions over the preparation of this plan. With regard to trunk roads, the A74 is being upgraded to motorway, thus linking the central Scotland motorway network to the M6/M1/M25 route, Scotland's essential link to the south and Europe. In addition, a major study into routes south of Edinburgh is nearing completion.

EC Funds

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the nature of all funds granted to Scotland from the European Community in the period May 1979 to May 1989; and if he will give headings of the European fund titles and list the total value under each heading of funds granted to Scotland.

Mr. Ian Lang [holding answer 9 May 1989]: Scotland has been awarded some £1,400 million in grants during the period 1979-88 from the European Community's structural funds—the European regional development fund, the European social fund and the agricultural guidance fund. In addition, some £1,500 million has been awarded to Scotland from other Community sources, principally in the form of loans from the European Coal and Steel Community and the European Investment Bank. Details of the main funding sources are set out in the table below.

European Regional Development Fund	736
European Social Fund[1]	246
Agricultural Guidance Fund[2]	385
European Coal and Steel Community[3]	82
European Investment Bank	1,384

Notes:

[1] Figures available only for 1982-88. Previously figures were not broken down into regions.

[2] Excludes Scottish share of market support expenditure incurred by the Intervention Board for Agricultural produce.

[3] Figure relates to article 56 reconversion loans. Regional breakdown of other ECSC assistance is not available.

Prisons (Lawyers' Visits)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange for the Lord Advocate to make a study of the claims made by a random selection of legal firms in Scotland for visits to prisoners in Barlinnie, Saughton, Perth, Shots and Peterhead prisons, using the legal aid system; and if he will set out the findings against the actual entries made in the official visitors' records of those prisons of lawyers and other personnel from the firms studied.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1989]: No. The administration of legal aid, including the settlement of solicitors' accounts, is the responsibility of the Scottish Legal Aid Board. Claims from solicitors are subject to examination, and the board's audit and investigation section would report any cases of possible fraud to the procurator fiscal. If the hon. Member has information which is relevant to the board's assessment of legal aid accounts, he should pass that to the board for consideration.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the United Kingdom has given by way of (a) grants and (b) loans to Iraq during each of the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Government grants to Iraq over the past five years have been exclusively for training of Iraqi students. The DTI has disbursed:

1988-89	60,000

The three other principal schemes are: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme, the British Council fellowship scheme and the Department of Education and Science—overseas research students award scheme, for which the figures are:

1984-85	86,400
1985-86	51,200
1986-87	72,600
1987-88	73,800
1988-89	92,000

Under the United Kingdom-Iraq financial protocols, the Government have negotiated the following Export Credit Guarantee Department-backed credits during the past five years:

1984	300 million
1987	175 million
1988	340 million

Kurds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the United Nations to investigate allegations of human rights violations, torture and genocide by the Iraqi Government against the Kurds.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have repeatedly made clear to the Iraqi authorities our concern at their failure to respect human rights, particularly those of the Kurdish community. We play a leading role in discussion of Iraqi human rights violations at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. A strongly-worded British-sponsored resolution in March was blocked by an Iraqi procedural motion.

Mr. John McCarthey

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken this year to secure the release of Mr. John McCarthey, a hostage in Beirut; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Before the break in relations with Iran, we raised the issue frequently with the Iranians. We have also raised the matter with other Governments and groups who might have influence on the hostage holders. Her Majesty's Ambassdor in Beirut remains active in a difficult and dangerous environment in following up all available information. We will continue to do the maximum possible.

Nelson Mandela

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reply has been received to the request by the British ambassador to South Africa to visit Nelson Mandela.

Mrs. Chalker: Our main concern is to see Mr. Mandela freed unconditionally. Our efforts are devoted to that end. In response to a letter from Mr. Mandela, the ambassador said that he would welcome a fact-to-face discussion. We understand that it would be for Mr. Mandela formally to notify the South African authorities if he wishes to pursue this.

Refuseniks

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Soviet authorities the case of the long-term refuseniks Emanuel and Judith Lurie who have recently been refused an exit visa.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have raised the Lurie's case with the Soviet authorities on numerous occasions—most recently during Mr. Gorbachev's visit to Britain in April. The latest Soviet response was that their application to emigrate is currently under consideration by a Supreme Soviet commission. We shall not let up until they are allowed to leave.

George Belitsky

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russians about their continued failure to grant an exit visa to George Belitsky.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made repeated representations to the Soviet authorities about Dr. Belitsky, most recently during Mr. Gorbachev's visit to Britain in April, and we will continue to press them until he is allowed to emigrate.

Partial Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and where the initial discussions on the amendment conference for the 1963 partial test ban treaty took place; and when and where he expects the trilateral discussions between the partial test ban treaty depository states to take place.

Mr. Waldegrave: Initial discussions between the depository Governments have taken place over the last two months in London, Washington, Moscow and Geneva. We expect that the depository Governments will meet trilaterally later this month, probably in Geneva.

Mr. Douglas Forsyth

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations have been made and when by his Department to the Egyptian Government to hasten the determination of the case brought by Mr. Douglas Forsyth in the Egyptian courts to recover the control and possession of his villa.

Mr. Waldegrave: No representations have been made on this matter since the Egyptian Court of Appeal announced its determination on 22 June 1988. Mr. Forsyth subsequently appealed to the Supreme Court (Court of Cassation) in Cairo. He has been warned by his legal advisers that it may take four or five years for a decision.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by his Department to the Egyptian Government concerning the payment of a tax refund owing to Mr. Douglas Forsyth by the Egyptian Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: A letter from Her Majesty's consul in Cairo to the general director of taxes in the appropriate tax office was given to Mr. Forsyth's legal advisers on 9 May. This asked for payment of the refund to be expedited. On 16 May Mr. Forsyth's legal adviser informed the consul that a cheque had been issued and passed to the Central bank. This has now been credited to Mr. Forsyth's account.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out Her Majesty's Government's policy in regard to the future continued requirement for United Kingdom retention of nuclear weapons in the light of threshold and aspirant nuclear weapons states capacity to develop or obtain nuclear weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to subscribe to the NATO policy that our security will depend for the foreseeable future on an appropriate mix of nuclear and conventional weapons. We fully observe our obligations under the 1968 non-proliferation treaty including those relating to the non-transferral of nuclear weapons technology.

Environmental Protection

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations has made any recent representations at the United Nations to promote environmental protection and global initiatives to achieve this.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific environmental initiatives the United Kingdom representative at the United Nations supported during 1989.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom permanent representative to the United Nations recently proposed the early negotiation of a convention on climate change and the strengthening of existing United Nations institutions concerned with environmental matters, especially the United Nations environment programme.

Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), Official Report, 13 April, columns 646-47, what assessment has been made of the SAAD-16 contract; what contacts have been made with the ambassadors of Egypt, Iraq and Argentina, or their diplomatic representatives in the United Kingdom arising from the Condor-2 missile development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no reason to doubt the recent media speculation that the SAAD-16 project is connected to Iraq's missile development programme. I made clear to the Iraqi ambassador on 19 April our serious concern over ballistic missile proliferation.

Falkland Fisheries

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress within the Falklands fisheries.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Falklands fishery is in its third successful year. The number of licences issued is regulated to meet conservation targets recommended by the renewable resources assessment group, Imperial college. Accordingly, the Falkland Islands Government reduced the number available for the 1989 second season. Revenue in 1989 is estimated to be £29 million.

Hong Kong

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to introduce a Bill to incorporate the United Nations declaration of human rights into the law applicable to Hong Kong citizens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are considering with the Hong Kong Government as a matter of priority whether to enact a human rights ordinance in Hong Kong and, if so, what form it should take.

Namibia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the South African withdrawal from Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: South African forces in Namibia are restricted to base and their phased withdrawal in accordance with the United Nations plan is in progress.

Israel

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his meeting with the Prime Minister of the state of Israel on 23 May.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and I had a frank and friendly exchange of views on middle eastern issues with Mr. Shamir. We welcomed his proposals for elections in the occupied territories as a useful step forward, but emphasised the need for progress towards a solution based on territory for peace.

Spying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) accredited diplomats and (b) other foreign nationals given official working permits have been expelled or deported from the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 for activities deemed to be incompatible with their status; and if he will list them by countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: As the information is not readily available, I will write to the hon. Member once it is to hand.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to other Governments to take Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are working for a successful outcome to the international conference on Indo-Chinese refugees in Geneva on 13 and 14 June, which we hope will result in a major international effort to resettle all the remaining Indo-Chinese refugees in the region, including the 14,300 in Hong Kong, as part of a comprehensive solution to this problem.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what undertakings he has received from the Chinese Government regarding the treatment and status of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong after the transfer of sovereignty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The matter has not arisen. It is our firm intention to ensure that the problem of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong is resolved well before the transfer of sovereignty in 1997.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not the practice to comment on matters of this sort.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Geneva talks on chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 9 May. The next round of the negotiations begins on 13 June.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many seizures of ivory have been made by the Hong Kong authorities from organisations and premises owned by the Poon family.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if CITES certificates are attached to the export of worked ivory from Hong Kong.

Mr. Waldegrave: CITES certificates are normally attached to exports of worked ivory from Hong Kong because most importing countries require them, although this is not a legal requirement of the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what value of worked ivory was imported from the United Arab Emirates into Hong Kong in October 1988; how many CITES permits were issued for the United Arab Emirates in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No worked ivory was imported from the United Arab Emirates in October 1988. Hong Kong extended its import licence control to cover all forms of ivory on 5 August 1988, and since then no licences have been issued for import of worked ivory from the United Arab Emirates.

Military Aid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much military aid has been granted by Her Majesty's Government in the current financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: We expect to spend £3 million on supplies of non-lethal military equipment during the current financial year. In addition, £23 million will be spent on foreign and Commonwealth military training in the United Kingdom and overseas.

Belize

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to maintain the military presence of Britain in Belize as long as the people and government of Belize wish it.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy is to maintain the British garrison in Belize for an appropriate period.

ENERGY

Coal Industry (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made of the total number of jobs directly and indirectly dependent on the coal industry of (a) South Yorkshire and (b) North Yorkshire; what were these figures for five years and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Figures for the number of jobs indirectly dependent on the coal industry are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information on jobs directly dependent on the coal industry for the areas and dates requested, is as follows:

	North Yorkshire	South Yorkshire
March 1979	36,856	38,803
March 1984	31,710	31,840
March 1989	14,705	14,724

The data refer to men associated with British Coal's North and South Yorkshire areas.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), Official Report, 15 May, column 109, the United Kingdom has any continuing interest in the imposition of bilateral nuclear safeguards implemented before May 1979 on plutonium exported for use in the Rapsodie test fast reactor in France since November 1964.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The plutonium was exported under the terms of the United Kingdom Euratom agreement 1959 which emphasised the peaceful nature of the co-operation. As far as the Department is aware it remains subject to Euratom safeguards.

Harwell Nuclear Plant

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how far the refurbishment of the Harwell reactor has progressed following the July 1987 plan set out for refurbishment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority informs me that the refurbishment programme for the nuclear research reactors at Harwell is reviewed annually. The current programme has been amended to take account of the closure of the PLUTO reactor in March 1990. This amended programme has been approved by Harwell's reactor safety committee and will be discussed with the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how long it is proposed to store Harwell reactors sea dump barrels containing intermediate level waste in their present condition; and what plans there are to make them safer.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Drums of radioactive wastes prepared for the 1983 sea disposal operation will continue to be stored in a safe condition and will be prepared for eventual disposal in the deep facility for low and intermediate level wastes which Nirex has been asked to develop.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many workers at Harwell reactors exceeded the radiation dosages of (a) 15mSv and (b) 50mSv; and what was the average dose of those working in the reactor area alone;

(2) what measures are being taken to ensure that doses received by the Harwell work force and local population are as low as reasonably possible; and what dose levels Harwell is working towards achieving.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of the radiation exposures incurred by Harwell staff are published annually in the UKAEA report on radiological protection and occupational health.

The UKAEA seeks to keep doses to the lowest reasonably practicable level. From 1 January 1988 it set an upper limit on individual dose of 30mSv per year, which is not normally to be exceeded except in cases of extreme occupational necessity. No one on the Harwell reactor site exceeded this level in 1988.

Exposure of the public to discharges of radioactive wastes from Harwell is monitored routinely and the monitoring results and dose estimates published annually in the Harwell laboratory report on radioactive discharges and environmental monitoring. I am arranging for copies of this report and the report on radiological protection and occupational health to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if there are any plans to improve the current state of the effluent treatment works at Harwell; and what mechanisms exist to shut down the flow of effluent into the Thames in the event of it exceeding waste safety levels;

(2) what measures have been taken to ensure that discharges and waste from the Harwell reactors in the river Thames are below the new general derived limits in the NRPB document GS-8.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The liquid effluent treatment plant is maintained in a condition which enables it to meet the requirements imposed by the relevant discharge consents issued by the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The measured effect of these discharges is typically between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. of NRPB general derived limits. Treated effluent is stored for analysis and is not discharged unless it complies with the requirements of the consents.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when a detailed inventory of the Harwell reactor core will be made available to the public.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information has already been made available in a letter to Dr. P. Taylor of the political ecology research group associated with Oxford city council, a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he plans to publish the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate safety audit of Harwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 31 January at column 156.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the route of the waste pipelines from the Harwell reactors to the Thames will be made public.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that information about the route of the pipeline is made available upon request, by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority as required to avoid accidental damage to the pipeline.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Nuclear Reactors (Safety)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, in view of the fact that the proposed pressurised water reactors at Sizewell B and Hinkley C will be the first to depend for their reactor safety solely on computer systems (a) what assessment he has made of the safety implications of and (b) what discussions he has had with the Central Electricity Generating Board about the advisability of relying solely on these computer systems; and if he has any plans to extend the new defence standard (Defstan 00-55) to those reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Sizewell B and the Hinkley Point C pressurised water reactors (PWRs) will have a computer based primary protection system designed to protect against all faults, and a non-computerised secondary system which will provide protection against the less unlikely faults. Both systems are at the design and development stage. The approval of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate will be required before the reactors are allowed to operate. The Ministry of Defence computer software standard "Defstan 00-55" is still in the process of development. It is for the Central Electricity Generating Board to decide if it wishes to use this standard. Its decision would be considered by the NII as part of the safety case.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Natural Gas

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government is considering to pipe natural gas from the South of Ireland to the North; what implications there are for those plans of the current state of repair of the gas works in the North; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Government have no such plans.

Carrick House Hostel

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will investigate the alleged intimidation of residents by Northern Ireland Housing Executive staff to prevent them from taking their grievances and fears about the future of the Carrick House hostel to the media; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I am advised by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the residents of Carrick House hostel have not been intimidated in any way by staff of the Housing Executive. While residents have access on a daily basis to Housing Executive management on matters of concern to them they are, of course, free as private individuals to approach the media at any time about their concerns which have been given considerable publicity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the short-term and long-term future of Carrick House hostel for homeless men, Belfast.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by the chairman that no changes will be made in the day-to-day running of the hostel until 1 April 1990 at the earliest. In the meantime the future of the hostel in its present form will be the subject of a strategic review. No plans for Carrick House will be finalised without prior consultation with the residents.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to consult the residents, staff and other interested bodies about both the short and long-term future of Carrick House; and what steps it is intended to take in the future to carry out such consultations.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by the chairman that staff of the Carrick House hostel have been made fully aware of the review of the hostel's role which will be undertaken by Housing Executive management. Regular meetings are taking place between residents' representatives and hostel management at which issues of mutual interest are discussed. These will shortly be supported by a regular newsletter to all residents aimed at reinforcing the consultative process.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that adequate health and safety standards, medical facilities, hygiene facilities, social counselling facilities and staffing levels exist for the residents of Carrick House.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Executive and I am advised by the chairman that Carrick House hostel has for many years provided basic facilities and support services for residents. There has been no diminution of existing standards and services since the hostel came under the Housing Executive management. The prospects for enhanced facilities and services commensurate with the needs of residents will be addressed as part of a forthcoming strategic review of the future of the hostel.

Dental Examinations

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been refunded as a consequence of the illegal charges for dental examinations between 1 and 16 January.

Mr. Needham: The total amount refunded to patients was £16,455·60.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional use of personnel was incurred and what was the time element involved in rectifying the error relating to illegal dental examination charges between 1 and 16 January.

Mr. Needham: No additional personnel were used. As the work involved was undertaken by existing staff as part of their normal duties, it is not possible to assess the time element involved in rectifying the error.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what costs were incurred in rectifying the errors relating to the illegal charges for dental examinations between 1 and 16 January.

Mr. Needham: The administrative cost of arranging for dentists to refund charges paid by patients for dental examinations carried out during the period 1 to 16 January was £2,612.

Grey Squirrels

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are in force to control grey squirrels in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Under article 15(1) of The Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 it is an offence to release grey squirrels into the wild. Grey squirrels may be killed or taken, other than by prohibited methods, by owners or occupiers, or persons authorised by them on their own land. The present population of these animals does not constitute a threat.

Health Board Assets

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of assets disposed of by each health board during 1987-88; and what was the total value of those assets.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 April 1989]: Monies received in respect of assets disposed of by each Health and Social Service board for 1987-88 are as shown in the table:

	Equipment and Vehicles £	Land and Buildings £
Northern Board	14,256	125,894
Southern Board	15,787	145,265
Eastern Board	nil	529,887
Western Board	40,637	195,077
	70,680	996,123

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library details of each major publicity campaign mounted by his Department in 1985-86 and each successive year, including in each case the objectives of the campaign, the intended audience and the outcome of the monitoring of the achievement of the intended objectives, and national research conducted for him by the Central Office of Information together with a note of the intended objectives in the campaigns in 1989-90.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 2 May 1989]: The information has been placed in the Library.

Police Posts

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many incidents requiring Royal Ulster Constabulary action have occurred in the area formerly served by each limited opening Royal Ulster Constabulary sub-station in east Antrim since these limited opening stations were closed;

(2) whether he will discuss with the new Chief Constable as a matter of priority the impact of closure of limited opening stations in east Antrim.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 2 May 1989]: The Chief Constable tells me that no limited opening police stations have been closed in East Antrim. There were however three police posts closed in the area—Craigyhill (Larne), Sunnylands (Carrickfergus) and Knockfergus (Greenisland). Since their closure in November 1988 the number of reports received for these areas which required some form of police action was 529, 346 and 169, respectively. The deployment of police resources is an operational matter for the judgment of the Chief Constable in which I do not propose to intervene.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there has been any change in levels of crime reported in each of the areas formerly covered by limited opening Royal Ulster Constabulary stations in east Antrim since they were closed; and if he will publish details of available statistics for a comparable period in the two years prior to closure.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 2 May 1989]: The total number of reported burglaries and thefts in the areas formerly covered by police posts (not limited opening stations) in Craigyhill (Larne), Sunnylands (Carrickfergus) and Knockfergus (Greenisland), which were closed in November 1988 in comparable periods over the last three years was as follows:

Period	Craigyhill		Sunnylands		Knockfergus
	burglary	theft	burglary	theft	burglary	theft
26 November 1986 to 28 April 1987	20	7	33	27	71	67
26 November 1987 to 28 April 1988	20	13	28	15	56	45
26 November 1988 to 28 April 1989	25	7	19	17	45	58

It is considered too early to reach a judgment as to the overall trend in the level of crime in these areas since the closure of the police posts.

Telephone System

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the Department of Economic Development's plans to upgrade the telephone system in Northern Ireland; what role is envisaged for Mecury Communications in this; and what measures his Department plans to ensure competition.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Plans to upgrade telecommunications systems in the United Kingdom are normally a matter for the telecommunications operators to make in the light of commercial considerations and any relevant obligations in their operating licences. The Telecommunications Act 1984 has already established the framework in which competing companies operate. We have no plans to change the present framework of telecommunications competition in Northern Ireland.

Exceptionally, Northern Ireland qualifies for support under the European Community STAR programme, under which the European Commission made funding available for the economic development of certain less-favoured regions. I understand the Department of Economic Development discussed the STAR programme with both British Telecom and Mercury and subsequently selected BT to provide the infrastructure funded under the programme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alcohol Misuse

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the ministerial group on alcohol misuse.

Mr. Hurd: The group, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council has made good progress. A report of action taken during the group's first year is published today. This gives an account of work in progress and takes a forward look at issues to be considered in the coming months.

Crime Prevention

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of his Department's budget is currently being devoted to crime prevention.

Mr. Hurd: Expenditure on crime prevention is met from Class XI, Vote 3, Home Office administration, immigration and police support services, England and Wales. In the current year, 2·8 per cent. of the total provision for this Vote is devoted to crime prevention.

Vote Tracing

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been received following the recent local elections with regard to the possibility of vote tracing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the county council elections on 4 May we have received five letters from hon. Members forwarding correspondence from constituents and two letters from members of the public on the procedure whereby a voter's electoral registration number is written on the ballot paper counterfoil when he or she votes.

Passport Checks (Airports)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give reasons for the abolition of channels designated for British passport holders at airports for passengers returning to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on 27 April 1989 at column 637.

Crime Prevention (Surrey)

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to encourage crime prevention in Surrey.

Mr. John Patten: Our strategy for crime prevention applies to all parts of England and Wales. Police manpower and resources have been substantially increased, Crime Concern was launched with Government support in May 1988 to stimulate, support and develop local crime prevention activity and the largest ever national crime prevention publicity campaign was launched last year.

My right hon. Friend approved a further 10 police posts for the force from 1 April bringing the authorised establishment up to 1,649, and I understand there are now 389 watch schemes covering approximately 20,000 households throughout Surrey, together with nine panels and four junior panels. The Surrey constabulary is one of 10 south east forces involved, with Home Office support, in an ambitious scheme "Secured By Design" which aims to encourage the construction industry to incorporate security measures as standard in new homes; the scheme will be launched on 7 June.

Prison Officers (Relocation)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial assistance is given to officers who are relocated in the prison system since the transfer grant for members of the prison service was stopped in 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Established prison officers qualify for financial assistance in accordance with the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code unless they are transferred at their own request. This covers, for example, the cost of a preliminary visit to search for new accommodation, night subsistence and lodging allowance, legal expenses of house purchase and sale, reimbursement of interest charges on bridging finance, interest free advance of salary for house purchase, removal and storage expenses, additional housing costs allowance and transfer grant.

This financial assistance is not generally available to civil servants including prison officers when taking up their first appointment.

Asylum

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to set up a major independent review of Home Office policy and practice with regard to asylum seekers.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on which date he received notification from the independent adjudicator that he had acted wrongly in relation to the cases of five Tamils, Mr. S. Sivakumaran, Mr. N. Vathanan, Mr. V. Rasalingam, Mr. V. Skandarajah and Mr. N. Vilvarajah, who had applied for asylum in the United Kingdom; on what date an application was made by Her Majesty's Government to the immigration appeal tribunal to hear an appeal against the adjudication; and on what date an application was made to the High Court for a judicial review of the tribunal's refusal to hear the appeal.

Mr. Renton: On 13 March 1989 an adjudicator upheld appeals against refusal of leave to enter in these five cases. My right hon. Friend sought leave to appeal to the tribunal on 22 March but on 19 April the tribunal decided that it had no jurisdiction to consider this appeal because of a clerical error in the service of the papers. On 12 May my right hon. Friend sought leave to move for judicial review of the tribunal's decision and leave was granted on 17 May.

Youth Custody

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the regime in youth custody institutions, and on any representations thereon which he has received.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Youth custody centres and detention centres were replaced by young offender institutions when the new unified custodial sentence was introduced last October. Revised guidance on regimes for young offenders was issued then, emphasising the need to prepare young offenders for their return to the community, and recognising the importance for juveniles and short-sentenced young adults of participating from the outset in brisk, modular regimes built on experience gained in detention and youth custody centres.

In general, the guidance was well received and regimes for the new sentence are working well. Representations have been received about one or two establishments which have experienced some difficulties and every effort is being made to resolve these problems.

Popplewell Report

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recommendations of the Popplewell report which bear on the responsibilities of his Department have not been implemented; what were those recommendations; and, in each case, what are the reasons they have not been acted upon.

Mr. John Patten: Four recommendations of the final report of the Popplewell inquiry which bear on the responsibility of my right hon. Friend have not been wholly implemented.

Recommendation 9(i) and (iii): as set out in the consultative document published in June 1986 the Government took the view that as safety certificates are instruments of continuing control it would not be appropriate to renew them annually or for local authorities to have powers to revoke them. The Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 provides for offences for a breach of any term or condition in a safety certificate and gives a separate power to local authorities to prohibit or restrict the admission of spectators to any part of a sports ground if there is judged to be a serious risk to their safety.

Recommendation 11: the Government considered that it would be wrong to provide a power of search which went further than existing statutory powers based on reasonable suspicion. A club may refuse admission to its ground to persons unwilling to be searched.

Recommendation 12: section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 provides an offence of disorderly conduct which is applicable in all public places, with the qualification that someone within hearing or sight of the conduct in question is likely to be caused alarm, distress or harassment. The Government is not persuaded that this qualification should be dispensed with.

Recommendation 13: section 5 of the Public Order Act 1936 has recently been re-enacted in the Public Order Act 1986 and is supplemented by the wide general powers of arrest in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The Government are not convinced that it is necessary to broaden these provisions further.

Police (Video Surveillance Equipment)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the use by police forces in the United Kingdom of video surveillance equipment in the community as a means of crime detection and prevention.

Mr. Hurd: The use of surveillance equipment is a matter for the operational judgment of the police acting in accordance with guidelines issued by the Home Office on 19 December [illegible].

Turkish Nationals

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to impose a visa requirement on Turkish nationals who wish to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: I will shortly lay before Parliament a statement of changes in the immigration rules which will include provisions requiring Turkish nationals to obtain visas before travelling to the United Kingdom. The necessary written notice of one month under the 1960 agreement for the abolition of visas (Cmnd. 1043) was given to the Turkish Government on 23 May. The new visa regime will come into effect on 23 June.

As part of the increasingly close co-operation between the member states of the European Community on immigration matters EC interior Ministers have for some time been discussing a proposal that visa requirements should be harmonised, and in this context that Turkish nationals should have to obtain visas to enter any European Community country. Most member states already require visas of Turkish nationals. Operational reasons now make it necessary for us to do the same.

For many years, the proportion of Turkish nationals arriving in the United Kingdom who were refused admission and removed has been growing. Between 1985 and 1988 it rose from less than 1·5 per cent. to 3 per cent. The number of Turkish nationals against whom action was started for breaches of the immigration law increased from 136 in 1985 to 401 in 1988. A growing number of Turks have claimed asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom. Whereas there were only about 60 such applications in 1987, during May alone this year there were more than 1,500. We are observing the meticulous procedures for examining each application which are necessary under the 1951 United Nations convention, and they necessarily take time. Many of those who have been interviewed are young men who have admitted to making their claim because of employment difficulties in Turkey. During May 106 applicants for asylum withdrew their applications and returned to Turkey.

These developments have placed strains on the immigration control, creating long delays on occasion and inconvenience for the main body of passengers. We have no wish to detain more Turkish asylum applicants than is necessary. But it is often not possible to grant temporary admission, where those involved have no connections in the United Kingdom, have been unable to support or accommodate themselves without help, and may be tempted to abscond. The accommodation which we have for detaining immigrants is being fully used, but because of the large numbers we have also had to use prisons in the south-west. We are grateful to the churches and other organisations and individuals who have undertaken to provide emergency shelter and food for those who can properly be granted temporary admission. We have made it clear that we will consider reimbursing specific costs which community groups have incurred. My officials are also in contact with the British Refugee Council about the establishment of a short-term hostel in Tower Hamlets.

It will be several months before the cases of those who have already arrived can be processed. All claims to asylum by Turkish nationals will continue to be carefully considered. Priority is being given to interviewing those in detention.

Unless we take action now the situation is likely to deteriorate through the summer. That is why we have decided to impose a visa requirement on Turkish nationals who wish to enter the United Kingdom. The new visa regime will inevitably take a little time to settle down but the introduction of a visa requirement should benefit all bona fide travellers including business visitors who will be less likely to encounter delays on arrival in this country. Regular visitors to this country will be eligible for multiple-entry visas.

Passports

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what emergency action he intends to take for those who require full passports; and if he will issue guidance for those requiring group passports.

Mr. Hurd: Delays which had been occurring in some areas during the peak season have been made worse by the recent industrial action in the passport offices. I very much regret the inconvenience that this has caused and will continue to cause to the public.

Following a ballot held by the Civil and Public Services Association (CPSA), 84 out of 295 staff in the Liverpool office came out on indefinite strike on 30 May. Following ballots at all other offices, members of the CPSA staged a one-day sympathy strike on 2 June in favour of the Liverpool action, when a total of 219 failed to report for work. A ballot held by the National Union of Civil and Public Servants (NUCPS) obtained no majority for a sympathy strike and, as a result, there has so far been no official action by NUCPS members.

All passport offices have remained open and counter services are being maintained, with priority being given to urgent cases. I am asking my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to contact certain other Governments to see whether, in the special circumstances in which we find ourselves, they would consider accepting expired British passports or (where they do not do so already) British visitor passports (BVPs).

Travellers should be given the best possible advice and I am urgently considering ways of improving this. Those with an urgent need to travel in western Europe may apply for a BVP to any main post office in England, Scotland or Wales. BVPs are now available on Mondays to Fridays, and on Saturday mornings. Where a standard passport has been applied for in good time and has not been processed, BVP fees will be refunded on application. For countries where a BVP is not acceptable, travellers who have an urgent requirement (including for group passports) are advised to call in person at the most convenient passport office, where every effort will be made to ensure that a suitable travel document is provided.

We shall seek to bring this dispute to a satisfactory end. Management and unions are meeting tomorrow and I hope that they will be able urgently to identify means of resolving the dispute.

The unions' principal demand is for an increase of 381 staff on the permanent complement of 1,000. The demand for passports is partly seasonal. Demand rises in the new year, reaches its peak in early summer and falls away in the autumn. It makes sense to deal with the busy period partly by employing temporary staff and using overtime. At present, for example, a total of 1,420 staff are employed. The unions are not asking for any increase in this total but that the permanent proportion be increased.

It is common ground that there have been changes in the pattern of demand. There is now a smaller difference between the peaks and the troughs. We therefore looked again at the case for a higher proportion of permanent staff. The National Audit Office has recently pointed out that it is not acceptable to staff troughs relatively more favourably than peaks. Nor would it be sensible to pre-empt the findings of the staffing review which both sides have already agreed should be undertaken once we know of the effects of the present computerisation programme so far implemented only in Glasgow and Liverpool.

But as a result of this examination, the Home Office concluded that the present justifiable maximum addition to the permanent complement was 158, subject to the impending staffing review. We began to recruit these extra permanent staff some weeks ago and propose to complete the process by the end of July.

We have always been ready to provide in total—whether permanent or temporary—as many staff as can be justified by the workload and accommodated in the offices concerned. But we would not be justified in employing on a permanent basis staff who would have little or nothing to do during the slack period in the autumn and early winter.

We have begun the computerisation of offices with the new passport. This must be the right long term solution. There have been teething problems with the introduction of computerisation in Glasgow and Liverpool, but we must see these through with the help of the staff.

We intend to give the passport office the status of an executive agency, and are discussing the timing and details of the change. We believe that this will free the energies of staff and management to give better service to the public.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current delay in (a) acknowledging receipt of applications to renew passports, (b) acknowledging receipt of applications for new passports, (c) issuing renewed passports and (d) issuing new passports in respect of the Newport passport office; and what specific advice he has given applicants by way of newspaper advertisements as to the lead-time for the two classes of applications.

Mr. Renton: Straightforward non-urgent postal applications of all types are being processed at the Newport passport office within a maximum of 46 working days. Urgent applications are given priority and are processed in accordance with travellers' requirements. Applications are not normally acknowledged. Information about current delay times is frequently given in response to enquiries from the news media, and in the recorded telephone message facility for callers to the Newport office, which is extensively used and updated weekly.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider appointing major sub-post offices as agents for the issue of British visitors passports; what size of local population would be suitable for such an appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The issuing of British visitors passports is generally limited to the 1500 Crown post offices for reasons of security and economy. By agreement with the passport department, the facility is being retained by those Crown offices which are regraded to sub-office status under the Post Office's current restructuring plans, but we would not wish to extend this arrangement to other sub-offices.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to deal with the inadequacies of the telephone system and inquiry service at the Liverpool passport office.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the Liverpool passport office telephone inquiry service.

Mr. Renton: The Liverpool passport office has a 24 exchange line switchboard. A recorded message facility offering an additional 26 telephone lines was installed in April, and further improvements are planned which will route incoming calls directly to the inquiry section. Efforts are being made to reduce the backlog of passport applications which is the reason for most of the telephone enquiries received, but the situation has been adversely affected by the current industrial action at Liverpool.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passport applications are awaiting process in (a) Liverpool and (b) London passport offices; what is the current average delay, in weeks; and what reasons there are for this backlog.

Mr. Renton: The information for the week ended 28 May is shown in the table:

Passport office	[1]Application	[2]Maximum processing times
Liverpool	215,469	15 weeks
London	22,622	5 weeks

Normally most applications are processed well within the maximum period, with priority being given to urgent cases, but a sharp increase in demand early this year has led to an increase in processing times, and staff at Liverpool are also having to adapt to a new computerised system of passport issuing. Additional staff have been employed to help deal with the backlogs, and a system of free two-year extensions to the life of certain expired passports submitted for replacement has been introduced at Liverpool to help relieve the immediate problem there. The situation at Liverpool has recently been made more serious as a result of industrial action by some members of staff.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to process passport applications at (a) Liverpool and (b) Glasgow; and what he expects the position to be by 1990.

Mr. Renton: Passport applications are processed according to the applicant's travel requirements, with priority being given to urgent cases. As a result, processing times in a given period vary considerably, and averages are not recorded.

The current maximum processing time for straightforward non-urgent postal applications at the Liverpool Passport Office is 73 working days, and at Glasgow 50 working days. Most applications are processed well within these maximum periods.

Processing time should be reduced next year when the new computer system is fully established, and staff have become fully conversant with its operation.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate loss of revenue to be incurred as a result of his decision to allow a two-year extension to passports without charge.

Mr. Renton: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the special arrangement at the Liverpool passport office announced by my right hon. Friend on 11 May at column 978.

We estimate that the measure will cost in the region of £1·3 million in the current financial year. Since, however, the great majority of the applications concerned are likely to be renewed on or before expiry of the two year extension period, the overall loss in passport fee receipts is likely to be small.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since the introduction of the guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations authorisation to use electronic surveillance listening and visual devices in each of the provincial police forces has been given by officers other than the chief officer.

Mr. Hurd: I refer to my reply to my hon. Friend's questions on 26 May at columns 756-7.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what control he exercises over the Metropolitan police use of electronic surveillance listening and visual devices other than that exercised by the force inspectorate.

Mr. Hurd: I refer to my reply to my hon. Friend's questions on 26 May at columns 756-7.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Vietnamese refugees there are currently in Hong Kong; how many he estimates will apply to settle in the United Kingdom; on what criteria their applications will be judged; and how many it is proposed to admit.

Mr. Renton: On 25 May, there were 14,200 Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong. A further 19,243 Vietnamese were awaiting examination of their claim for asylum. It had been decided that 1,410 did not qualify for refugee status.

On 23 February 1989 the Government confirmed its intention to admit a further 1,000 Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong for settlement in the United Kingdom. The 1,000 will include relatives of Vietnamese already here and others with the potential quickly to become self-sufficient in the United Kingdom, together with some who have been in the camps for a long time and have not been accepted elsewhere.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Vietnamese refugees have had their travel documents confiscated for using those documents to travel to Vietnam.

Mr. Renton: Refugee status is accorded to those who have a well-founded fear of persecution in their own country. Although withdrawal of status is not automatic, travel to that country may put into question a continuing claim to refugee status and eligibility for refugeee travel documents. Following visits to Vietnam, 39 refugee travel documents have been impounded on return. So far, seven holders have been required to surrender their documents and decisions about the remainder will be made shortly, after careful consideration of the individual circumstances. In all cases, the persons concerned retain indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom. It would be open to them to apply for discretionary travel documents.

Visa Applications

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will indicate the reason for the delay in processing visa applications by his Department; what he proposes to do about it; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on which date those applications for visas to enter the United Kingdom now being completed were submitted to his Department;

(3) what is the average length of time taken to decide visa applications made by non United Kingdom nationals.

Mr. Renton: The reasons for the time taken to complete visa applications and the steps in train or already taken to reduce unnecessary delay were explained in my reply of 23 March to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) at column 809 in respect of all entry clearance applications.

The way in which visa applications are allocated within the immigration department means that it is not possible to give a common date on which those applications now being completed were first referred to the department. Visa applications are dealt with according to, first, their perceived priority and, second, the date on which the application was first received within the department.

Information about the average length of time taken to decide visa applications is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remand (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce time limits on periods of remand imposed on young people by magistrates in the Leeds area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Custody time limits were introduced in West Yorkshire on 1 June. They apply to all those of whatever age remanded in prison department custody.

Prison Service (Recruits)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new recruits to the prison service resign in the first 12 months of service due to unacceptable postings, according to the latest available figures.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Between 3 May 1988 and 30 April 1989, 73 basic grade prison officers resigned from the prison service within 12 months of joining. Information about their reasons for doing so is not available.

Incest

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to decriminalise incest between brothers and sisters aged over 21 years.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Prison Staff

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve working conditions for administrative staff in prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Proposals to improve working conditions for staff in existing establishments are considered on an individual basis according to the needs of the establishment and competing demands on the building programme. The improved provision which is to be made for administrative staff in new training prisons is described in the prison design brief which was published in March, 1989. Copies have been placed in the Library. Work is in hand on the adaptation of the brief to the requirements of local, female and young offender establishments.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many administrative staff are employed in Her Majesty's prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 1 May, there were 1,942 members of the administrative group (including part-time staff) employed in prison service out-stations.

Her Majesty's Prison, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the use and cost effectiveness of agency staff in the hospital wing of Her Majesty's prison, Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Nurses employed by agencies have been used at Leicester prison from time to time to meet short-term needs. The director of prison medical services considers this to be a medically and financially acceptable means of filling temporary gaps in health care services.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the introduction of female prison officers at Her Majesty's prison, Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Four female officers have now been posted to Leicester. In the governor's view they have settled in well and are making a useful contribution to the work of the establishment.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why certain petitions from Her Majesty's prison, Leicester to his Department have not been acknowledged, and others have remained unanswered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All petitions addressed to the Secretary of State received from prisoners at Leicester and which were handed in prior to 2 April have either been acknowledged or a reply has been sent. All petitions received since that date have been acknowledged.

As a local prison, Leicester has a rapid turnover of inmates. Most of the men whose petitions were recorded as outstanding in the Leicester petitions register have been transferred, and replies have been sent to their current establishment. Arrangements are being made to bring Leicester's records up to date.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to end the overcrowding of Her Majesty's prison, Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's prison, Leicester, in common with other overcrowded local prisons, will benefit from the delivery of substantial numbers of places under the prison building programme. The greatest measure of relief will be provided by the opening of a new local prison at Milton Keynes in 1992.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are taken to put non-smoking prisoners in cells with other non-smokers if they so wish at Her Majesty's prison, Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Arrangements are made, as far as is practicable, to meet requests from inmates who ask to be located with other non-smokers in circumstances where they are required to share a cell with others.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to increase the availability of workshops for prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to increase the number of workshop places at Leicester but efforts are continuing to ensure the full utilisation of existing places.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why modernisation of the kitchen at Her Majesty's prison, Leicester is behind schedule.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A new kitchen was to have been provided at Her Majesty's prison Leicester by late 1994. Design work on this scheme has however recently been suspended, as part of an effort to focus resources on schemes in the prison building programme which are either under way, or where work has to start on site in the next two financial years.

Alcoholic Prisoners

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what help has been given to alcoholic prisoners since the pre-release scheme was abolished.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not aware of the pre-release scheme to which the hon. Member refers.

The number of pre-release courses, which will often include advice on the dangers of alcohol abuse, is increasing steadily. It has long been the prison department's policy to seek to educate prisoners about these dangers. In addition, there is now a branch of Alcoholics Anonymous within most adult establishments, and prisoners nearing the end of their sentence can be put in touch with the local Alcoholics Anonymous group near their home address should they wish to take advantage of the counselling service provided.

Eames Report

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the Eames report into suicides in Armley prison, Leeds, to the prison officers' representatives on the Whitley council negotiating body.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No, but the trade union side on the departmental Whitley council has been made aware of its main conclusions and recommendations.

Police Vehicles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans to streamline police vehicle fleet management as set out in the third police paper "A Report by the Audit Commission".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for individual chief officers and their police authorities to determine how best to manage their vehicle fleets. I understand that forces are now reviewing their arrangements in the light of the Audit Commission report. Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary will be examining these arrangements in the course of their annual inspection. The Home Office intends to issue guidance to forces on best practice.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Disaster and Refugee Units

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff have been employed in each year since 1979 by the disaster and refugee units of the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Year	Disaster unit[1]	Refugee unit[2]
1980	4·0	—
1981	3·0	—
1982	3·0	—
1983	3·0	—
1984	2·5	2·5
1985	2·5	2·5
1986	2·5	2·5
1987	2·5	2·5
1988	2·5	2·5
1989	2·5	2·5

[1] Temporary additional staff are assigned to the disaster unit during major and prolonged disasters.
[2] The refugee unit was set up in 1984.

The total number of permanent posts in the disaster and refugee units will shortly increase from five to seven.

Disaster Relief

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between the Overseas Development Administration and non-Government agencies concerned with arrangements for disaster relief since the time of the Armenian earthquake; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Regular meetings, some of which I chair, are held between the Overseas Development Administration and those non-Government organisations concerned with providing disaster and refugee relief. I am planning a review of disaster relief arrangements with non-Government organisations before the summer.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the progress that has been made by the United Nations disaster relief organisation in drawing up a register of the assistance available by donor nations to countries facing major disasters.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Nations disaster relief organisation is in the process of drawing up such a register and I understand is in contact with donor Governments.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to provide further assistance to the United Nations disaster relief organisation in order to improve its effectiveness.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have already provided financial assistance to United Nations disaster relief organisation for its important disaster prevention and preparedness activities. I am planning to increase this assistance in the context of the forthcoming United Nations international decade for natural disaster reduction.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to assist developing countries in the development of renewable energy sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over the last decade the Overseas Development Administration has promoted the use of renewable energy sources in developing countries through funding research and development for a wide range of technologies, including efficient wood-fuelled cooking stoves, efficient charcoal manufacture, biogas production, windpumps, microhydro turbines, solar crop drying and the use of waste materials for process heating.

Aid funds have also been used to implement projects aimed at utilising geothermal energy, wind-powered electricity generation, and solar-powered water pumping. They have also been used to help finance the manufacture of efficient wood-fuelled stoves, as well as for building and rehabilitating substantial hydropower installations.

We continue to seek ways of helping to carry forward developments in renewable energy which carry real promise of being effective.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to assist developing countries with measures for energy conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Through our aid programmes we have been assisting developing countries for some years with measures aimed at improving the efficiency of their energy sectors. The provision of British equipment, skills and training has been financed to improve generating efficiency, reduce transmission losses and improve distribution networks. In conjunction with other donors we have also encouraged Governments to adopt appropriate pricing policies for power to ensure that it is used effectively and economically. Against the background of our environmental concerns, we shall continue to give high priority to this kind of assistance in the energy sector.

Mozambique

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current situation relating to the development by the Commonwealth Development Corporation of schemes in Mozambique; and if he will give details of proposals relating to their financing.

Mr. Chris Patten: I authorised the Commonwealth Development Corporation to operate in Mozambique in November 1987.

The CDC is discussing a draft operating conditions agreement with the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique which we hope will be signed shortly. The CDC are investigating a number of investment possibilities including projects for the development of tea, sugar, forestry, cashew nuts and citrus.

Fiji

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of grant aid has been allocated to Fiji by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will list it by category.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest provisional figure for our bilateral aid to Fiji is £1,595,000 in 1988. £39,000 of this total represents expenditure under grant financial aid agreed in 1981. About £1,555,000 was spent on technical co-operation (the provision of expert manpower and advice from the United Kingdom and the training of Fijians). I envisage that technical co-operation will continue at around this level. These figures exclude expenditure by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made towards establishing the Civil Service college as an executive agency.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to announce that the Civil Service college will today become an executive agency of the Cabinet Office (OMCS). The college is the chief central provider of training for civil servants. It charges for its courses and government departments are free to go elsewhere. Agency status will add to the managerial freedoms which the college has enjoyed for some time and will enable it to compete more effectively for its business. It will provide a sharper focus for the college's operations and a clearer relationship with my Department. I have set demanding targets against which its performance will be measured in future. Copies of the framework document are being placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Staff (Relocation)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to relocate staff of his Department to Runcorn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Employment Department, in common with other Departments, has been conducting a study into the potential for moving posts out of London and the south east. The study is nearing completion and we expect to announce its conclusions and our decisions to the House shortly. At present 27 per cent. of Employment Department head office staff are located in Runcorn.

Strikes (Statistics)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the number of strike days lost per 100,000 workers for each year since 1975 in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) West Germany, (d) Italy, (e) the EEC average, (f) the United States of America, (g) Sweden and (h) Japan.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for the years 1977 to 1986 is given in the article "International comparisons of industrial stoppages for 1986" published in the Employment Gazette, June 1988, page 335, a copy of which is in the Library. This article also gives a description of the different coverage of the statistics in the various countries. For the data for 1987, the latest available, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 4 May 1989, Official Report, column 241. Figures for 1975 and 1976 are given in the article "International comparisons of industrial stoppages for 1984" published in the Employment Gazette, July 1986, page 266, a copy of which is in the Library.

EEC average figures would not be meaningful because of the wide variation in the coverage of the industrial dispute figures in member states.

International Agreements (ILO)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all the occasions on which Britain has been found guilty of breaking international agreements by the United Nations International Labour Organisation.

Mr. Cope: The Government are convinced that United Kingdom law and practice fully conform with ILO obligations.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with the chairman of the construction industry training board in early April.

Mr. Nicholls: I am holding a series of meetings with the chairman of the construction industry training board to discuss plans for training within the construction industry as envisaged in the White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s" (cmd 540).

I have asked the chairman to put forward proposals agreed by the industry for future training arrangements.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in the last year for which figures are available how many people in the Chesterfield area have had their unemployment benefit payment reduced; by what average amount; and for what average period.

Mr. Lee: No figures are kept on the number of people who have their unemployment benefit payments reduced.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: No electronic surveillance listening devices are used by the Department of Employment or by any organisations or agency acting on its behalf.

Disablement Advisory Service

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people the Disablement Advisory Service employs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There were 190 Disablement Advisory Service (DAS) staff in post on 31 March 1989. I believe that the Disablement Advisory Service performs an invaluable role in encouraging and assisting employers to apply good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the Disablement Advisory Service is resourced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Disablement Advisory Service consists of specially trained employment service staff. They are organised in 68 teams, covering all parts of the country, and can be contacted through local jobcentres. For very large employing organisations, there is a special head office advisory service, the major organisations development unit, based in London, but available nationwide.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Disablement Advisory Service distributes leaflets concerning its activities to general practitioners' surgeries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No. The Disablement Advisory Service's main role is to help employers to adopt and implement good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities. It is not directed towards general practitioners or their patients. A new booklet, "Job Hunting for People with Disabilities", appropriate to disabled jobseekers and their advisers, will be issued shortly for distribution to local points of contact, including surgeries, at disablement resettlement officers' discretion.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there are any plans to expand the Disablement Advisory Service's activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are no current plans to expand the Disablement Advisory Service's (DAS) activities. However, DAS activities are being considered as part of my Department's internal review of its policies and services for people with disabilities.

Non-EEC Workers

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take action against the restaurant chain Garfunkels over the employment of illegal non-EEC workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

Action has been taken in the past to deal with illegal entrants and other immigration offenders employed by the restaurant chain Garfunkels. However, there was insufficient evidence available to act against their employer. I will, of course, consider any such evidence which my hon. Friend may wish to provide.

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created since May 1979.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. Between June 1979 (there are no estimates for May) and December 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there was a net increase of 1,148,000 in the work force in employment in the United Kingdom. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variation. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates he has of the average number of people employed by companies with turnovers of (a) less than £250,000, (b) £250,000 to £500,000, (c) £500,000 to £1,000,000, (d) £1,000,000 to £2,000,000, (e) £2,000,000 to £5,000,000 and (f) £5,000,000 and above.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is not available. The Department's employment estimates are taken from short term surveys and censuses of employment which do not relate employee numbers to company turnover.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many (a) part-time and (b) temporary employees there were in the Leeds metropolitan district for each of the years 1979 to 1989 shown by (i) gender and (ii) as a percentage of all employees (1) in manufacturing industries (2) in the service sector;

(2) how many employees were in employment in manufacturing in the Leeds metropolitan district in each of the years 1979 to 1989;

(3) how many manufacturing and non-manufacturing employees there were in employment in the Leeds metropolitan district for each of the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lee: The available employee estimates for the area are from censuses of employment taken in September 1981 and September 1984 and are given in the table. More up-to-date employee estimates for local areas, from the September 1987 census of employment, will become available later this year.

[2] The district is defined in terms of ward boundaries as at 1981.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were self-employed in the Leeds metropolitan district for each of the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lee: The information is available only for Census Day in April 1981. In the census returns 24,601 people living in the Leeds district said that they were self-employed.

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the unemployment rates by highest qualification held for men and women in each of the standard regions and for Wales for each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Estimates from labour force surveys are as shown in the following table:

Wages Councils

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his reply of 23 May, Official Report, columns 506-7, he will provide the references to any published evidence from employers in wages council trades that they are more ready to offer young people employment; if he will place in the Library copies of any written but unpublished evidence available to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The evidence consists of comments made by certain organisations in their responses to the consultation document on wages councils and in other correspondence. It is not the Department's practice to ascribe particular comments to individuals or organisations.

Employment Training

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider introducing a gardening and caretaking scheme under employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Training in both gardening and caretaking occupations is already offered under employment training where there is a demand for such training from long-term unemployed people and where there are suitable employment opportunities following training.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sprint Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the spending of the EEC Sprint programme was spent in Britain in each year of the programme's existence; and if he will list the projects and agencies supported by Sprint in Britain since the programme started.

Mr. Forth: The detailed breakdown of funding requested by the hon. Gentleman is unavailable. However, during the 1984-88 Sprint pilot phase, it is possible to attribute at least 2·3 million ecu to United Kingdom beneficiaries out of Sprint funding of 18·63 million ecu.

Excluding funding of 2·73 million ecu for EC groups and associations (eg EuroTechAlert) the United Kingdom proportion of the Sprint budget amounted to 14·5 per cent.

The list indicates that 80 United Kingdom contractors received support for 123 projects under Sprint since the programme began.

Innovation and Technology Transfer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name the British members of the consultative committee on innovation and technology transfer; and what proportion of the total EEC membership they comprise.

Mr. Forth: There are two members of my Department on the committee for innovation and technology transfer out of a total membership of twenty four. They are Mr. J. Niblett and Mr. M. Porter.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, further to his reply of 27 April, Official Report, columns 614-5, concerning gross output of finished manufactures and imports of semi-manufactures, intermediate products and basic materials, whether he will provide comparable figures for clothing; and if he will add figures for 1973 and for exports.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available figures for gross output of finished manufactures for clothing follow. A split of trade into semi-manufactures, intermediate finished manufactures and basic materials is not appropriate as clothing is a finished manufacture for consumer use.

Gross output of finished manufactures: clothing[1] 1985 prices

	£ million
1970	5,023
1973	5,627
1988	5,654

[1] Finished clothing is defined as clothing, hats and gloves, hosiery and other weft knitted goods (SIC[80] group 453 and activity 4,363).

Trade Statistics

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of (a) United Kingdom exports to Iraq, and (b) United Kingdom imports from Iraq in the last year for which information is available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The provisional figures for 1988 are (a) United Kingdom exports to Iraq £412·1 million; (b) United Kingdom imports from Iraq £43·4 million.

Textile Products

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the United Kingdom's trade deficit relates to trade in textile products; and if he will make a statement on the extent of import penetration in this sector of the economy.

Mr. Alan Clark: The crude deficit on trade in textiles in 1987 was £1,816·3 million compared with an overall crude deficit of £24,177·5 million. Comparable figures for 1988 show crude deficits of £1,921·4 million and £24,936·7 million. Import penetration for textiles in 1987—the latest year for which figures are available—was 48 per cent.

Manufacturing Investment (North-East)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the level of manufacturing investment in the north-east for each of the last 10 years, giving 1979 as 100.

Mr. Atkins: No regional breakdown of manufacturing investment for 1988 is yet available. The required information for the period 1979 to 1987 is shown in the following table:

Manufacturing investment[1] in the North-East[2], at, constant prices, as a percentage of 1979 level

	North-East
1979	100
1980	66
1981	42

1984	47
1985	59
1987	53

[2] The North-East is not a standard region of the United Kingdom but can be defined as the North less Cumbria. It comprises Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland and Tyne and Wear.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My Department's radiocommunications division regularly monitors the radio spectrum to establish patterns of use, to trace radio interference and to assist in the management of radio services, in keeping with its licensing function under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts. Commercially available radio receivers are used for monitoring purposes.

EC (Footwear Imports)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to initiate talks at European Community level between non-European Community producers and European Community members on the regulation of footwear imports to the European Community; and if he will seek to establish an agreement for footwear similar to the multi-fibre arrangement in textiles and clothing.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom already operates a range of quantitative restrictions on imports of footwear from Eastern Europe and China. EC member states will need to consider the findings of the Commission's Community-wide investigation into imports of footwear from Taiwan and South Korea before deciding what further action might be appropriate. We have asked the Commission to look in particular at the effect of imports into the United Kingdom from Taiwan of women's made-to-order footwear.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to seek an early decision from the European Commission arising out of its investigations into the injury caused to the United Kingdom footwear industry by excessive imports from Korea and Taiwan.

Mr. Clark: I have written to Commissioner Andriessen seeking an early decision on the need for safeguard action on imports into the United Kingdom of women's made-to-order footwear from Taiwan. The Commission is anxious, however, not to pre-judge the outcome of the Community-wide investigation into imports of footwear from South Korea and Taiwan. Commissioner Andriessen has assured me that the Commission will conclude their investigation as quickly as possible. I will of course consider what action is appropriate once the Commission's recommendations are known.

Post Office Users National Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received the latest report of the Post Office Users National Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I receive all Post Office Users National Council reports. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster referred to its latest joint announcement with Royal Mail Letters in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 25 May (Official Report, column 651).

Institute of Logistics and Distribution Management

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received a copy of the most recent report of the Institute of Logistics and Distribution Management ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I believe the question refers to the report prepared by the Institute of Logistics and Distribution Management on "The Market for Express Goods Services between the UK and Europe, North America and the Far East". The British Overseas Trade Board decided that there were good reasons to examine in detail aspects of the fast growing express freight market for manufactured goods and so funded this study. My Department is considering the report and views on it from interested parties but has not yet reached conclusions on it or on follow-up action.

Postal Monopoly (LSE Report)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received a copy of the report on the postal monopoly, published in September 1988 by the London School of Economics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My Department has received the report on the Post Office's letter monopoly by Saul Estrin and David de Meza of the London School of Economics. We keep all the options for change in the letter monopoly under review, including those put forward in the LSE report.

Post Office Counters

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will announce the timetable for the privatisation of Post Office Counters.

Mr. Forth: We have no present plans for the sale of Post Office Counters Ltd. The Post Office has, however, announced plans for regrading 250 Crown post offices to sub-offices, which will mean increased private investment in the post office network. Sub-offices already make up most of the counters network.

Post Office Parcels

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will announce the timetable for the privatisation of Post Office Parcels.

Mr. Forth: We have no present plans for privatisation of Royal Mail Parcels.

Post Office Board

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the salaries and review dates of each member of the Post Office Board, with the date and length of his appointment.

Mr. Forth: The Post Office annual report and accounts lists the names of the members of the Post Office Board and the years of their appointment, and also gives the number in different ranges of remuneration. Their remuneration is revised with effect from 1 April of each year. Appointments are made for periods of up to five years.

CEPT (EC Paper)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of the paper submitted to the European Commission by members of the CEPT, as mentioned in his oral reply to the hon. Member for Battersea of 17 May, Official Report, column 313.

Mr. Forth: No, CEPT working papers are restricted to the membership. The rules of the CEPT do not allow such documents to be disseminated and I am therefore unable to place them in the Library.

Post Office

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent the Post Office subsidises its competitive services by its monopoly services.

Mr. Forth: There is no subsidy from the Post Office's monopoly services to its competitive services.

Remail

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he has taken to support international express carriers regarding Remail.

Mr. Forth: None. I am, however, aware that the EC is investigating a complaint by courier services about postal administrations.

Postal Service

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what aspects of the postal service have been investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in each year from 1979.

Mr. Forth: Since 1979 the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has published four reports on aspects of the postal service. These were:

1979 Inner London letter post.
1984 The Post Office letter post service.
1986 Post Office procurement activities.
1988 Post Office counters services.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evidence he has submitted to the European Commission on European postal services from 1992.

Mr. Forth: None.

Courier Services (Anti-competitive Practices)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evidence he has submitted to the European Commission on the formal complaint made by private courier services about anti-competitive practices by postal administrations.

Mr. Forth: None. It is for the Post Office to reply to questions put to it by the European Commission.

Letter Deliveries

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many letters and what percentage of letters, posted first class, fail to arrive the following delivery day.

Mr. Forth: The Post Office's new end to end monitoring system, which records results separately for each district by destination, shows that for 1988-89 the percentage of first class letters not delivered the day after posting varied widely between districts. The range was:

	per cent.
Delivery within district of posting	6-36
Delivery to neighbouring districts	8-41
Delivery to distant districts (excluding Belfast)	20-50

The detailed figures for each district, which were published by the Post Office on 25 May, have been placed in the Libraries.

Public and Private Postal Services Working Group

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department last chaired a meeting of the public and private postal services working group; what was discussed; when it will next meet; and whether representatives of the Institute of Logistics and Distribution Management will attend.

Mr. Forth: The working group chaired by my Department to which I believe my hon. Friend refers is a technical working party of officials and representatives of the industries concerned with Her Majesty's Customs" treatment of express consignments. Its meetings are private and it would be inappropriate to publish details. The Institute of Logistics and Distribution Management is not represented.

Postal Officials (New Zealand)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department last met postal officials from New Zealand; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My officials last met postal representatives from New Zealand at the Executive Council meeting of the Universal Postal Union (UPU) in April of this year. A wide range of postal topics was disccussed between the representatives of about 40 postal administrations.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer to the Director-General of Fair Trading claims made in advertisements by RRR Ltd. that one of its products can regain crystal clear hearing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Advertisements for hearing aids are covered by specific provisions in the British code of advertising practice, which is administered by the Advertising Standards Authority. False statements in advertisements are covered by the provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. The Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations 1988 enable the Director-General of Fair Trading to seek a court injunction to prevent the publication of a misleading advertisement, where other means of control have failed.

I have no powers to intervene in the way in which the director-general performs his functions under the regulations. The hon. Member may wish to write to the Advertising Standards Authority or, if he prefers, to the Director-General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to implement stricter regulations for the dispensing of hearing aids in the private sector to protect the consumer.

Mr. Forth: The Hearing Aid Council (Amendment) Bill sponsored by the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones), which the Government supports, would achieve stricter controls over the dispensing of hearing aids for the benefit of hearing-impaired consumers.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much worked and raw ivory has been exported to Dubai in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: There has been no export of worked or raw ivory to Dubai in any of the last five years.

Finished Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 27 April, Official Report, columns 615-16, concerning trade in finished manufactures with the United States of America, whether he will provide the correlation co-efficient between the change in the United States of America share of United Kingdom exports lagged by one year after the change in relative export unit values in United States dollars.

Mr. Alan Clark: The correlation coefficient is negative with a value of 0·2.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 27 April, Official Report, columns 614-5, concerning gross output of finished manufactures and imports of semi-manufactures, intermediate products and basic materials, whether he will provide comparable figures for finished textiles, including man-made fibres with other fibres as basic materials; and if he will add figures for 1973 and for exports.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available figures are given in the tables. Trade figures at 1985 prices are not available at the required level of detail. Current price data are shown instead.

Gross output of finished manufactures: textiles[1] 1985 prices

	£ million
1970	[2]—
1973	2,039
1979	1,833
1988	2,011

[1] Finished textiles is defined as carpets and other textile floor coverings, household and made-up textiles (SIC[80] groups 438 and 455).
[2] Not available.

Exports and imports: textiles OTS basis, current prices

	[1]Semi-manufactures		[2]Intermediate finished manufactures		[3]Basic materials
	exports £ million	imports £ million	exports £ million	imports £ million	exports £ million	imports £ million
1970	335·9	217·5	—	—	96·5	183·7
1973	485·4	431·5	—	—	172·1	322·2
1979	1,093·0	1,413·4	—	—	315·7	475·5
1988	1,615·2	2,965·5	—	—	439·5	688·4

[1] Semi-manufactured textiles are defined as division 65 of SITC less made-up articles (658) and floor coverings (659).
[2] Intermediate finished manufactures are not appropriate to textiles.
[3] Basic materials for textiles are defined as division 26 of SITC (textile fibres).

Hand-held Video Cameras

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action the Government are taking concerning the European Commission's proposal to increase the tariff on compact hand-held video cameras from 4·9 per cent. to 14 per cent.

Mr. Alan Clark: Neither the United Kingdom nor any other member state, supported the Commission proposal. It has therefore been withdrawn.

Tariffs

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether (a) the United Kingdom or (b) the EEC maintain tariffs on any products where there are no idigenous industries to protect.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom applies the common Customs tariff of the European Community. This includes duties on goods not produced in the Community.

Iron and Steel Imports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications the Department of Trade and Industry import licensing board received from traders wishing to exclude existing contracts from the import prohibition on iron and steel from South Africa set out in NTI2097; how many applications were approved; what was the total value of approved applications; what were the dates of entry into such contracts; and how long they will run.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 26 May 1989]: Records are kept of licences issued, not of applications. Since 1 January 1987, 377 licences have been issued. Allowing for licences returned unused, the total quantity licensed was 66,187 tonnes. Details for 1986 could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

Information relating to contract terms is provided in confidence by applicants.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what quantity and value of iron and steel goods in each of the commodity categories described in Notice to Importers 2097 and 2180 were imported in each month (i) from all sources and (ii) from South Africa, in the period since September 1986; and what was South Africa's ranking among all sources.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 26 May 1989]: The information requested is not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Pension Age

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations with the European Commission and other member states on the state pension age.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The proposal for a Council directive "completing the implementation of equal treatment for men and women in statutory and occupational social security schemes" was first tabled in October 1987. Since March 1989 there have been three working group meetings of officials from member states in Brussels and the draft directive was also discussed at the informal meeting of Ministers at Toledo on 28 April which I attended. While progress has been made there still remain a number of outstanding problems. Negotiations are continuing to see how these might best be resolved so as to ensure unanimous agreement by member states.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many deaf-blind people are currently in receipt of the mobility allowance; how many have appealed after an initial refusal; and how many have succeeded on appeal.

(2) what is the estimated cost of extending the mobility allowance to (a) all deaf-blind people, and (b) deaf-blind people between the age of five and 75 years.

Mr. Scott: I regret that we do not collect information about the number of deaf-blind people who have claimed or who are in receipt of mobility allowance. In view of this and the lack of information about the number of deaf-blind people in the population, it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the cost of making the allowance available specifically for deaf-blind people.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the community care grants expenditure in respect of the Department of Social Security offices in Smethwick and West Bromwich for the year 1988-89; what percentage these figures are of the total amount of community care grants allocations for those offices in Smethwick and West Bromwich for the year 1988-89; and what arrangements are made so far as the disposal of the surplus expenditure for 1988-89 is concerned.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1988-89 outturn data for individual local offices will be placed in the Library shortly.

Local office allocations are made for a financial year. Unspent balances at the end of a financial year are not available for expenditure in the following year.

Income Support Claimants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of income support claimants for each Department of Social Security office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest information available, for 28 February 1989, has been placed in the Library. The source of the information, which is provisional and subject to amendment, is the quarterly count of cases in action which may include some cases not actually in receipt of benefit.

Community Charge

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend the period of time in which people can apply for a poll tax rebate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to extend the 56-day limit. The regulations provide that people who claimed community charge benefit within 56 days of 1 April 1989, or who claim within 56 days of receiving their first community charge demand notice if this is later, will have their claim treated as if it had been made on 1 April 1989 provided that they were liable for the charge from that date and the appropriate authority is satisfied that any delay in issuing the demand notice was not caused by the claimant's attempts to evade payment of the charge. The 56-day period was arrived at following discussion with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. It has been extensively publicised. It represents a real concession to the concerns expressed and is a significant departure from the principle that benefit cannot normally be awarded until it has been claimed. The 56 days allow reasonable time for the making of claims, even where people may not have claimed benefit before.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish (a) his latest estimates of how many people in England and Wales will be entitled to community charge rebate, and (b) the expected level of take-up.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that no estimates are available of the numbers of people who might be entitled to community charge rebate if they were to claim it, so it is not possible to derive an estimated level of take up. Estimates of the numbers of people expected to receive it were given in my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) on 19 October 1988 at columns 897-8. Revised estimates will be available in due course.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reply he has sent to the letter from ACT-UP delivered to him on 18 May; what action he is taking to ensure that all people with AIDS or ARC are able to afford the food recommended to them by their doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A copy of my reply to the letter from ACT-UP which was handed to their representative on 22 May has been forwarded to the right hon. Member. We will be giving careful consideration to the implications for benefits of the results of all the OPCS surveys. We welcome the views of interested groups such as ACT-UP on those results and their implications.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

"Our Business is Service"

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of publishing the leaflet entitled "Our Business is Service".

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 26 May at columns 749-50.

Budgeting Loans and Community Care Grants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for (i) the East Midlands region and (ii) each of the offices serving the Nottingham, North constituency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the revised estimate for family credit take-up by caseload included the estimated number of families entitled to family credit due to the freeze in the child benefit rate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest estimate relates to 1988 only. It is based on an examination of family expenditure survey returns for April to December 1988 and therefore has regard to the child benefit rates applicable at that time.

Benefits

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) families and (b) children are in receipt of means tested benefits broken down into family credit, income support and housing benefit as a result of the freeze in child benefit, taking into account the new estimates of the take-up of family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 May 1989]: Estimates are only available on the caseload assumptions in the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm. 615). They are based on combined 1985 and 1986 family expenditure survey data uprated to reflect the position in 1989-90. Estimates of this kind are particularly uncertain because of small sample sizes. Bearing these factors in mind, it is possible that an extra 15,000 families (with perhaps 30,000 children) are now claiming family credit because child benefit was not uprated in April 1989. The number of extra families receiving income support and housing benefit are likely to have increased by about 5,000 (with perhaps 10,000 children).

ENVIRONMENT

Archaeological Investigations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce statutory controls to require developers to undertake archaeological investigations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Many developers already contribute voluntarily to archaeological investigations before development. Where a site is scheduled, archaeological evaluations may be required before an application for scheduled monument consent can be determined, or an opportunity for excavation may be required as a condition of consent. Local planning authorities may in some circumstances require further information about the archaeological implications of development proposals before they determine a planning application. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 24 May at column 602 about our proposals to issue guidance on such matters.

Water Undertakings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 27 April, Official Report, column 522, concerning installing water treatment plant to meet EEC standards, whether he will publish in the Official Report the sum of the initial projections together with his view of what constitutes a reasonable return capital on capital invested in water undertakings.

Mr. Howard: Projections of costs are still under discussion with individual water undertakers. We are also still considering the rate of return appropriate for water and sewerage undertakers.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether lists of historic buildings have yet been fully compiled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The national resurvey of listed buildings, which began in 1970, is virtually complete. Three areas have still to be resurveyed: Isle of Lundy; the parishes of Bracebridge Heath, Canwick, Heighinton, Washingborough in Lincolnshire; and the parish of Southwell in Nottinghamshire, and six areas are in the process of being resurveyed. A further 50 lists are being prepared for publication. To date a total of 1,757 resurvey lists have been published. Some of the lists produced during the early years of the resurvey have been found to be deficient in various respects. English Heritage will be reviewing them over the next few years.

Commercial Premises

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of the alteration of valuation lists for commercial premises, he intends to make regulations revising the basis of calculation for compensation to tenants under part 2 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

Planning

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the matter of B1 planning consents in general following the recent High Court case, London borough of Camden v. Department of the Environment, and on local authorities' powers to attach conditions to such consents in particular.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 11 May at column 521. I do not believe the recent High Court judgment is inconsistent with the Government's policy in relation to the "business" use class.

South Yorkshire Valuation and Community Charge Tribunal (Members)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by name and nominating body the current serving members of the South Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal.

Mr. Gummer: The following people are all members of the South Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal.

Members appointed by Barnsley metropolitan borough council:

Mrs. A. Bailey; Mrs. N. Collett; Councillor T. Dixon; Mr. P. Doyle; Councillor Mrs. C. Evans; Councillor B. G. Goodard; Mr. M. Harper; Councillor Mrs. M. Harrison; Mr. S. Hepworth JP; Mr. F. Hollins; Mrs. N. Hollins JP; Mr. J. Marsden; Mr. D. Roberts; Mrs. P. Smith; Mr. A. Tucker; Mr. A. Vodden.

Members appointed by Doncaster metropolitan borough council:

Mr. M. Burns; Councillor B. Cassley JP; Mr. M. Collins; Mr. H. Dutton; Councillor G. Gallimore JP; Mr. H. Gladders; Mr. A. Greening; Mr. C. Griggs; Councillor A. Grimson JP; Councillor K. S. Judge; Councillor A. Lanaghan; Mr. M. McCoy; Councillor G. M. McDade JP; Miss E. Plumb; Councillor C. W. Verrill; Mr. C. Wedd.

Members appointed by Rotherham metropolitan borough council:

Mr. D. W. Dale; Mr. A. M. Davies JP; Mr. J. P. Dolbon; Mrs. I. Farren; Mrs. A. Jarvis; Mr. A. Kiddy; Mr. R. H. Noble; Mr. R. S. Russell; Councillor Miss M. Sides; Mr. P. Thirlwall; Mr. V. M. Thornes; Councillor B. Walker; Councillor S. Walker; Councillor G. Whelbourn; Mr. B. Williams; Councillor W. Winder.

Members appointed by Sheffield metropolitan district council:

Mr. F. W. Adams; Mrs. M. Burrow; Councillor J. A. Butler; Mr. J. M. Davey; Mr. J. G. Marshall; Mr. M. Nicholson; Mr. C. Oates; Mrs. D. Podlesny; Mrs. G. L. Randell; Councillor Mrs. E. Smith; Mr. M. E. Smith; Mr. G. A. Winter; Mr. P. E. Wood.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites in the three counties of Yorkshire, and in Humberside which are licensed to dispose of (a) radioactive waste, (b) special waste, and (c) clinical waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's "List of premises in England and Wales currently authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to dispose of radioactive waste" which includes premises in the three counties of Yorkshire and Humberside. A copy of this list is in the Library of the House. The numbers of sites in these counties licensed for the disposal of other wastes are listed below. Information on the types of waste licensed for disposal is held by the appropriate waste disposal authority, which is required to maintain a public register.

	Number
North Yorkshire	118
South Yorkshire	257
West Yorkshire	443
Humberside	154

Steel-framed Houses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those constituencies where he has information that there are steel-framed houses.

Mr. Trippier: Locations of steel-framed houses built in England, and reported to the Building Research Establishment, are listed in its 1987 report "Steel-framed and steel-clad houses: inspection and assessment". A copy is in the Library.

Capital Accounting

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to implement the proposals contained in the consultative document on capital accounting requiring local authorities to maintain a comprehensive inventory of assets.

Mr. Gummer: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the consultative implementation manual, "Capital Accounting in Local Authorities—The Way Forward", published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils, and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities. This document is the responsibility of the bodies by which it was published and its implementation is a matter for the local authorities to whom its recommendations are addressed. I am sympathetic to the general approach set out in the manual.

Popplewell Report

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many recommendations of the Popplewell report which bear on the responsibilities of his Department have not been implemented; what were those recommendations; and, in each case, what are the reasons they have not been acted upon.

Mr. Moynihan: None. In December 1986, the Home Office issued a revised version of the guide to safety at sports grounds. Chapter 11 of the document—"Fire Safety"—dealt, among other fire-related issues, with recommendation 10 of the Popplewell report. The technical content of the building regulations continues to be under review. Later this year, the Department will issue a consultation document covering all aspects of the building regulations as they relate to fire.

The Government's proposals for a football membership scheme (recommendation 15 of the Popplewell report) are contained in the Football Spectators Bill.

Water Pollution

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times between 1985 and 1987 water sources in England and Wales were shown to exceed maximum admissible concentrations of pollutants.

Mr. Howard: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the period from May 1988 to May 1989 maximum admissible concentration levels have been exceeded in water supplies for Leicestershire.

Mr. Howard: I understand that water supplies for Leicestershire regularly complied with the EC drinking water directive in the period May 1988 to May 1989 except for water supplies serving a small part of north-west Leicestershire, which marginally exceeded the standard for magnesium. There were occasional breaches of the pesticide standard set in the EC directive. However, all were within levels considered acceptable by medical advisers.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on proposals to privatise certain functions of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I have given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) today.

Riso Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what Ministers or officials of his Department will (a) be present, (b) present papers and (c) be involved in round-table discussion sessions at the Riso international conference on environmental models; emissions and consequences, to be held on 22 to 25 May in Denmark.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: One of the Department's principal scientific contractors, an expert on environment modelling, attended parts of the Riso meeting. He gave a paper and participated in discussions.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was his Department's participation at the conference on protecting the ozone layer held in Finland on 2 May; what papers were presented by it; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the conference.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State attended the first meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol in Helsinki. Copies of the United Kingdom national statement, and of the message from the London "Saving the Ozone Layer" conference, which he presented to the meeting, are available in the Library. The European Community's call, made in response to a United Kingdom initiative, for CFCs to be eliminated by the end of the century, was endorsed by the Governments attending the Helsinki meeting. We shall work towards amendment of the protocol to this effect at next year's second meeting of the parties in London.

"Health for All By The Year 2000"

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will ensure that rate support grant reflects the call for local authorities to invest in programmes to achieve the targets set in the "Health For All By The Year 2000" programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local authorities to decide to what extent the targets outlined in the WHO "Health For All By The Year 2000" programme should be reflected in their plans and priorities. Rate support grant is unhypothecated and provides support for local authority spending on all services.

Corby New Town

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the total sum realised by sale of assets by the Commission for the New Towns in Corby for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

Sums realised by the Commission for the New Towns for the sale of assets

Year	£ million	Corby
1979-80	6·43	—
1980-81	29·61	·952
1981-82	61·85	·580
1982-83	51·18	5·840
1983-84	55·25	2·517
1984-85	57·59	1·506
1985-86	78·67	1·826
1986-87	169·31	4·464
1987-88	216·66	10·564
[1]1988-89	334·00	17·414
	1,060·55	45·663

[1] Provisional.

Notes:

1. Figures do not include sums realised by development corporations prior to wind-up.
2. Figures are gross, before deduction of selling expenses.

Air Quality

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will be introducing measures to protect public health based on the World Health Organisation air quality guidelines for Europe 1987;

(2) whether his Department has assessed the World Health Organisation air quality guidelines for Europe 1987;

(3) whether the Government intend to introduce air quality standards for particulates and tropospheric ozone based on the World Health Organisation air quality guidelines for Europe 1987;

(4) whether the Government intend to introduce air quality standards for Britain for sodium dioxide and nitrous dioxide which are more stringent than EEC standards.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Warren Spring Laboratory published a report—LR650 (AP)—in January 1988 comparing the available United Kingdom air quality data with the World Health Organisation guide values. WHO emphasises that these are not limit values but rather targets for improved air quality, to be considered in the context of prevailing exposure and environmental, social, economic and cultural conditions.

We continue to keep air quality under review in relation to the WHO guidelines and other environmental information. At present we see no reason to set more stringent limits in the United Kingdom than are generally applicable in the EC for sulphur dioxide, particulates and nitrogen dioxide. Nor do we have plans to set a standard for tropospheric ozone.

Acid Rain

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the most recent figures on the levels of acidification in rainfall (a) in Warrington, (b) the north-west and (c) the average for Britain as a whole.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The data requested are provided for 1988 in the table. The United Kingdom average has been computed from 60 stations in the Department's acid rain network, the north-west average from seven stations and the Warrington value has been interpolated from nearby stations.

Annual mean precipitation weighted acidity in rainfall

Data region	u eq H+/litre	pH
United Kingdom	25	4·6
North-West	31	4·5
Warrington	33	4·5

Simplified Planning Zones

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for the establishment of simplified planning zones have been (a) received and (b) approved in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Greater London.

Mr. Chope: The adoption of simplified planning zones is handled locally. At present, two simplified planning zones have been adopted in England, none in Wales and none in Greater London.

Ports (Rating)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has completed his review of rating procedure for statutory and non-statutory ports; if he will publish the conclusions of the review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Discussions with representatives of the ports about rating are continuing and we shall be making proposals later in the year.

Water Use

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any water use restrictions currently in operation.

Mr. Howard: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he is giving to water authorities and water users during the current dry spell.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for action, including advising consumers, rests with the water undertakers. We are, however, monitoring water resources closely.

Water Stocks

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what regions of the United Kingdom impounded water stocks are below average.

Mr. Howard: Only in the Southern water authority's area are some impounded water stocks below normal.

Housing Associations

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his plans for full implementation of recommendations from the Public Accounts Committee on the control and funding of housing associations, in its 16th report of Session 1985-86, HC 108.

Mr. Trippier: Action taken and in hand on the Committee's recommendations is described in the report No. 312 by the Comptroller and Auditor General "Department of the Environment: Housing Association Grant", published on 13 April 1989.

Management and Maintenance

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest comparable information on the average level of spending on management and maintenance by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations, in (i) Greater London, (ii) metropolitan districts and (iii) non-metropolitan districts in England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: The latest available study comparing the management costs of local authorities and housing associations is in section 2 of "The Nature and Effectiveness of Housing Management in England" produced by the Centre for Housing Research at the university of Glasgow. This distinguishes metropolitan authorities including London boroughs from non-metropolitan authorities and national or regional housing associations from local housing associations. Copies of the report, which was published earlier this year, are in the Library.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest estimates of the levels of expenditure on management and maintenance by local authorities that will take place in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Trippier: I assume this is a reference to management and maintenance of local authority housing. This is a matter for the councils concerned.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Department does not possess or use any listening equipment for surveillance of its telephone network.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those newspapers contacted by his Department in connection with the Minister for Local Government's community charge articles.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply of 23 May to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, (Mr. Nellist) Official Report, column 488, he will list the newspapers to which more than 500 articles were sent.

Mr. Gummer: I will write to the hon. Members with this information.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have indicated that they will incorporate the whole or part of the contents of the leaflet, "The Community Charge: The So-Called Poll Tax: How It Will Work For You" in material they are to distribute; and if he will list them.

Mr. John Gummer [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The leaflet was not intended for incorporation into other information material although some local authorities have expressed an interest in using it in this way. However, it stands on its own as a concise, accurate and factual introduction to the community charge.

Nene Washes Site

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conditions were attached to the offer of a grant by the Nature Conservancy Council to the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds for the purchase of 16·5 acres of lowland damp grassland within the Nene Washes site of special scientific interest near Whittlesey, Cambridgeshire to extend the existing Nene Washes Royal Society for the Protection of Birds reserve.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: After careful consideration the NCC decided that no offer of grant should be made in this instance.

Sewage Sludge (Dumping)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the blockade by the Greenpeace ship Moby Dick of the tanker Mancunium, due to be loaded with sewage sludge for dumping at sea, at the Slowhill Copse sewage works at Marchwood and about Her Majesty's Government's policy on the dumping of sewage sludge at sea.

Mr. Howard: On 23 May 1989, a vessel operated by Greenpeace UK Ltd. obstructed the departure of a vessel loaded with sewage sludge from Slowhill Copse sewage works of the Southern water authority for disposal at sea. Following an application to the High Court, an injunction was granted to the Southern water authority restraining Greenpeace from this or similar action.

I deplore action of this sort which in this case could itself have caused significant environmental problems. At present the United Kingdom disposes at sea each year of about 30 per cent. of a total of 1·2 million dry tonnes of sewage sludge. The basis of our policy in this area, as for other wastes, is to select the best practicable environmental option for each waste stream.

In the case of sea disposal, dumping operations require approval from my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and his colleagues in Scotland and Northern Ireland and a licence is granted only where it is clear that no practicable alternative on land is available and it can be shown that there is no risk to the marine environment.

Community Charge (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment is he yet in receipt of information necessary to give the national community charge for the city of Nottingham for the year 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 9 May at column 386 and to the hon. Member for Sheffield Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 25 April at column 532.

Severn Estuary

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for safeguarding the outstanding natural interest of the Severn estuary, in the light of current development pressures; whether he plans further designations and safeguards in the wider Severn estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Severn estuary has been notified by the Nature Conservancy Council as a site of special scientific interest under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This notification provides the site with legal protection from activities likely to harm its nature conservation interests and ensures that the views of the NCC are taken into account when development proposals affecting the site are being considered.

Two parts of the estuary, Bridgewater Bay and the upper Severn have been designated as special protection areas for birds under the European Communities directive 79/409/EEC and/or as wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention. The whole estuary has also been indentified by NCC as having the potential for designation under the directive and the convention but no formal case for further designations has yet been submitted.

Classification as an SPA imposes stringent criteria, above and beyond those related to SSSI notification, that must be applied when development proposals are being considered; these criteria are set out in detail in DOE circular 27/87—"Nature Conservation". The circular makes it clear that, for planning purposes, potential SPAs should be treated in the same manner as formally designated sites.

Beaches

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of all United Kingdom beaches which in 1988 failed to comply with the EEC bathing water directive 76/160 for enteroviruses and salmonella;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report, all United Kingdom beaches which were tested in 1988 for compliance with the EEC bathing water directive 76/160 for enteroviruses and salmonella.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 May at column 265.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sources of pollution into the Bristol channel he can identify; and if he will set a target date of 1 January 1993 for the adjacent beaches to meet European Community bathing water standards.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 May 1989]: This information is not held centrally in the Department but information on consented discharges is available on the public registers held by water authorities. We are currently discussing with water authorities, programmes for improving bathing waters; however, individual schemes necessarily take up a number of years from initial feasibility studies to completion, and may involve major engineering work. Consequently, I am unable to set a target date of 1 January for all the waters along the Bristol channel to meet EC standards.

North West Water (Land Development Officer)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the implications of the advertisement by North West Water for a senior management post for a land development officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The notice was an internal staff circular related to the making permanent of a temporary post concerned with disposal of surplus land. The disposal of surplus land by public bodies is well-established Government policy. I would expect the future water plc to pursue the disposal of surplus land. As I have recently announced, provision is being made through the Water Bill for the benefit of proceeds of land disposals to be shared between customers and shareholders.

Housing Costs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in the Official Report, the permitted expenditure limits for house building, repair, renovation and maintenance and the actual expenditure, for each of the Somerset district councils, in the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 May 1989]: It is for each local authority to decide how its resources should be targeted; the actual expenditure figures are as follows:

Somerset—1986-87 outturn £'000

	New build (including land)	Repair and maintenance	Renovation
Mendip	2,218	2,545	2,926
Sedgemoor	2,114	2,061	1,263
Taunton Deane	822	3,190	1,893
West Somerset	806	737	443
South Somerset	2,046	2,493	1,424

Somerset—1987-88 provisional outturn £'000

	New build (including land)	Repair and maintenance	Renovation
Mendip	1,005	1,872	1,435
Sedgemoor	1,682	2,452	2,066
Taunton Deane	718	3,033	2,079
West Somerset	894	425	492
South Somerset	2,065	3,818	1,377

Somerset—1988-89 estimated outturn £'000

	New build (including land)	Repair and maintenance	Renovation
Mendip	1,010	3,004	1,239
Sedgemoor	3,621	4,078	2,379
Taunton Deane	2,848	4,742	4,085
West Somerset	1,050	650	770
South Somerset	1,732	4,571	3,834

Gipsies

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide comparative figures for the number of gipsy families known to be in England and Wales at present, five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 May 1989]: Accurate information on the numbers of gipsy families is not available. The numbers of gipsy caravans in England as recorded by the twice-yearly counts carried out by the Department for the periods in question were:

	Number
January 1989	11,321
January 1984	9,929
January 1979	8,358

The Welsh Office has its own arrangements for monitoring numbers of gipsies in Wales.

Endangered Species

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to prevent trade in endangered species in the United Kingdom; and if he has any plans for new initiatives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The United Kingdom complies fully with the requirements of EC regulation 3626 which implements the convention on international trade in endangered species within the European Community. Our most recent initiative is to call for concerted European support for a total ban on trade in new ivory. We shall do this at the next Council meeting of Environment Ministers on 8 June.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantity of ivory from the African elephant is currently held or has recently been held at Heathrow airport awaiting retrospective import clearance; what information he has as to whether this ivory was obtained in breach of the convention on international trade on endangered species; and what action he proposes to take.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: I understand from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise that details of individual consignments cannot be released where Customs action is not yet completed.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he recently allowed the delivery to the United Kingdom of several tons of African elephant tusks originally obtained in contravention of the convention on international trade on endangered species.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The Department has allowed no such delivery. Under the convention on international trade in endangered species it is the Department's responsibility to issue import and export permits for ivory. We do so only with the agreement of the CITES secretariat ivory unit in Lausanne, Switzerland and when we are satisfied that the requirements of EC regulation 3226/82 have been met.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to secure the sale of nationally owned nature reserves; which reserves may be sold during the next two years; and what evidence he has of public support for such disposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The Nature Conservancy Council is reviewing policy for NNRs. In response to the council's preliminary report published on 3 May, the Government welcomed the suggestion of increased participation by the voluntary and private sectors in reserve ownership and management. We also recognised that there would be a need for some reserves to be held in the NCC's ownership, and assurances that the ownership and management of sites could only be transferred on condition that there continued to be adequate safeguards to ensure the conservation of their wildlife or geological interest. I understand that the council is planning to submit proposals later this year.

The majority of national nature reserves are already owned and managed for conservation by private landowners or voluntary bodies.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, regarding storage of radioactive waste for which there is presently no disposal site available, whether it is Government policy that radioactive waste shall be stored at the site at which the waste is created in the case of Crown-exempt nuclear operators including the Ministry of Defence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waste should be safely stored in an appropriate place where it is created or elsewhere. This Department has no statutory control over the storage by Crown-exempt operators such as the Ministry of Defence. However, they have agreed to observe practices no less stringent than those subject to statutory control.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) regarding storage of radioactive waste for which there is presently no disposal site available, whether it is Government policy that radioactive waste shall be stored at the site at which the waste is created;

(2) regarding storage of radioactive waste for which there is presently no disposal site available, whether Government policy allows for the transfer of radioactive waste from one storage facility to another;

(3) what is the Government's policy on the storage of radioactive nuclear waste for which there is, at present, no disposal facility available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The Government's policy is that wherever such waste is stored it must be safe. This may be at the site where it is created or elsewhere. The safe transport from one storage facility to another is not precluded.

Tributyl Tin (Pollution)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what rivers in England and Wales are known to have been polluted by the use of tributyl tin by boat owners.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 26 May 1989]: The main freshwater rivers affected have been those carrying large numbers of pleasure craft, which were treated with tributyl tin antifouling paints before the Government banned their sale and supply in 1987. We have direct evidence of contamination of the Rivers Bure, Yare, Great Ouse, Thames, Aire and Medway. It is too soon to detect the effect of the ban in reducing tributyl tin concentrations in rivers.

Drought Forecasts

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest forecasts available to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 26 May 1989]: On latest information, areas at risk due to low levels of water resources are confined to limited parts of the south-east and east Devon. Elsewhere, resources are in a healthy state. We are monitoring the position closely.

Rents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 386, to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) what steps he proposes to take to ensure that tenants outside the protection of the Rent Acts are not charged rents inclusive of rates after the introduction of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Gummer [holding answer 26 May 1989]: The Housing Act 1988 will apply to most tenancies entered into after 15 January 1989 and any rents determined by the rent assessment committee under that Act will be exclusive of rates. Any reductions in inclusive rents arising from the introduction of community charge should be settled on the basis of individual contracts.

General Anaesthetic (Minors)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the occasions on which a parent or guardian of a minor does not need to sign the consent form for general anaesthetic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Parental consent to examination or treatment of a minor is not required in the following circumstances:

1. Where the child has reached age 16;
2. Where there is a medical emergency and parental consent is not obtainable;
3. Where a child has sufficient understanding of the treatment proposed to give consent on his or her own behalf. (It will be a matter of medical judgment as to whether any particular child has sufficient understanding).

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific proposals is he preparing to tackle the problem of food poisoning in airline meals.

Mr. Freeman: It is the responsibility of the airlines and the airline caterers to ensure that their food does not cause food poisoning.

Local authorities are responsible for the enforcement of the food legislation where applicable and this is currently under review.

We are shortly to issue reviewed guidelines on cook-chill preparation and airline caterers using the cook-chill system should follow the recommendations.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning associated with untreated milk occurred in England and Wales in each of the years from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1983	285
1984	406
1985	233
1986	347
1987	366

Dentists

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received the report of Professor Dawid's study on measurement of the work load of dentists; if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The report, "Measurement of Dentists' Workload" by Professor A. P. Dawid, of the department of statistical science, University College, London, was commissioned jointly by the Department and the British Dental Association to advise on the principles on which the measurement of work load in the general dental services should be based. Officials from the Department and the association have studied the report and agree that it is a useful starting point for a programme of further work designed to achieve an agreed position on work load measurement for the purposes of the dental rates study group and the preparation of evidence for the doctors and dentists review body. Initial discussions on how to take this programme forward are already under way. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional costs have been incurred in the change in organisation from the Dental Estimates Board to the Dental Practice Board; and whether he will itemise the main headings of expenditure.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no costs associated with the change of name from the Dental Estimates Board to the Dental Practice Board.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions are currently being undertaken with the object of improving emergency dental services; and when he anticipates being able to report progress;

(2) what provision he intends to make to enable patients in the community dental service to have access to emergency dental services.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements for the provision of local emergency dental services are a matter for the relevant family practitioner committee and any such services are also available to persons who have been treated by the community dental service. Discussions, with representatives of the dental profession, on the terms of a new contract for general dental practitioners will cover emergency treatment provision but we cannot say when we shall be able to report on the discussions.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in computerising the remuneration of general dental practitioners in England and Wales; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The translation of returns from dentists to the Dental Practice Board into schedules of payments for family practitioner committees to make to them is already fully computerised. A pilot trial to test the feasibility and value of electronic data transmission between dentists and the Dental Practice Board is currently in progress, involving 60 dentists in 26 practices in England and Wales. A full report on the trial is expected in July.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has held an internal inquiry into the late arrival of form FPN 472 relating to dental charges; and what redress is available through departmental machinery for the general dental practitioners in the event of subsequent under-remuneration.

Mr. Freeman: Family practitioner notice 472 advised dentists of changes in dental charges as from 1 April 1989. The department distributed the notice to family practitioner committees (FPCs) in time for them to deliver to dentists before the changes came into effect. In a very small number of cases there was a delay of a few days in the transmission of the notice from FPCs to dentists. There is no reason why this should lead to any under-remuneration.

Abortions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) consultants and (b) nurses have taken a conscientious objection to abortion under section 4 of the Abortion Act 1967; and what have been the comparable figures each since 1968.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the total number of abortions performed in England and Wales under the Abortion Act 1967; in each region, how many of these abortions were performed to save the life of the mother; and what percentage the latter represents of the former.

Mr. Freeman: The exact information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost; the nearest readily available information, covering the years 1970 to 1987, is shown in the table.

Number of notifications of (a) total abortions, (b) abortions performed under grounds of 5 or 6 [1] of the 1967 Abortion Act, by area of usual residence, [2] England and Wales 1970 to 1987.

Note: A = Total abortions 1970-87 inclusive.
B = Performed under grounds 5 or 6.

[1] The Act allows abortions to be performed in emergency to savey the life of the pregnant woman (ground 5) or to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman (ground 6).

[2] 1970-73: Hospital regions.
1974-87: Regional health authorities.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of abortions that have so far been performed in the United Kingdom under the Abortion Act 1967; how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother; and what percentage this latter figure represents of the former.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of notifications of legal terminations, to resident and non-resident women, carried out in the United Kingdom under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967 from 27 April 1968 to 31 December 1987 is 2,960,234. Of these 142 (0·005 per cent.) were performed under ground 5 of the Act, in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Complete United Kingdom data for 1988 are not yet available; currently available data, which are provisional, are as follows:

	Total	Ground 5
England and Wales (1 January to 30 September 1988)	137,103	[1]4
Scotland (1 January to 31 December 1988)	10,003	0

[1] (0·003 per cent. of total).

Note The Abortion Act 1967 does not apply in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of abortions performed on girls under the age of 16 years have been carried out in (a) non-National Health Service premises and (b) pay beds in National Health Service hospitals in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: No data on the number of terminations performed in pay beds in National Health Service hospitals are collected centrally. The other data requested are shown in the table.

Number of notifications of (a) total abortions and (b) those performed in non-NHS premises, on girls under 16 years of age, England and Wales, 1983-87

Year	A Total number	B Performed in non-NHS premises	Percentage B of A
1983	4,566	1,898	41·6
1984	4,609	1,971	42·8
1985	4,427	1,874	42·3
1986	4,240	1,734	40·9
1987	4,075	1,747	42·9

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing a reduction in the upper time limit for abortions to 20 weeks; what percentage the latter represents of the former; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since March 1989 we have received 25 representations; 14 supported a reduction in the time limit. None referred specifically to a 20-week limit.

Seat Belts

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the saving to the National Health Service as a result of the compulsory wearing of front seat belts, in each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No precise estimate has been made. The introduction of compulsory wearing of front seat belts has undoubtedly saved the lives of some of those involved in road traffic accidents. However, many of those whose lives have been saved have instead received injuries with consequent costs to the National Health Service which would not previously have been incurred.

Mental Health

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staffed hostels for discharged psychiatric patients provided by (a) local authorities and (b) voluntary bodies are available for (i) short-term accommodation andd (ii) long-term accommodation.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not collected centrally in the form requested. The numbers of homes, hostels and residential places for mentally ill people in each local authority in England is published in "Homes and Hostels for Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People (A/F 11)". A copy of the 1986 publication is in the Library; and a copy of the 1987 publication, which it is hoped will be available shortly, will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health districts which have care registers for patients with special mental health needs; and when he plans to direct other districts to establish such registers as recommended in the report of the inquiry into the care and after-care of Miss Sharon Campbell.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally. Planning guidance, issued to health and local authorities in July 1988, requires each district to have developed by 1991 a "care programme" to provide a system of co-ordinated continuing care for people chronically disabled by mental illness. Further guidance being prepared by the Department will include the need for a register of patients.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the inquiry into the care and after-care of Miss Sharon Campbell that he issue a written summary, classifying their statutory duties to provide after-care for former mentally disordered patients, to health and local authorities.

Mr. Freeman: This recommendation is under consideration.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that employing authorities have issued guidelines to staff in respect of violence from clients, and the reporting of such incidents of violence, as recommended in the report of the inquiry into the care and after-care of Miss Sharon Campbell.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety at Work legislation places a statutory duty on employers to provide a safe working environment for their staff and the Health and Safety Executive published "Preventing Violence to Staff" with general guidance on this subject last year.

Complementing this for the health and personal social services are: The report, "Violence to Staff, DHSS Advisory Committee on Violence to Staff", chaired by Lord Skelmersdale, which was issued at the same time as the Sharon Campbell report to directors of social services and NHS general managers and the report of the Association of Directors of Social Services, "Guidelines and Recommendations to Employers on Violence Against Employees" which was sent to local authorities in 1987. Last February we issued a video on violence to staff to directors of social services and to general managers. When issuing the video we said the aim was that authorities should use the Skelmersdale report and the video to stimulate constructive discussions amongst members, managers at all levels, staff and their representatives about the development of strategies and the other recommendations in the Skelmersdale report, which included the need for staff to report violent incidents. We said also this material should be useful in training courses to increase the awareness among the staff and managers of the problem of violence and what might be done to counteract it.

At law it is for local authorities and health authorities, as the employers of the staff in these services, to take appropriate action and this was generally considered to be the best level at which action should be taken.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to issue the guidelines about psychiatric case management and community care reviews, as recommended in the report of inquiry into the care and after care of Miss Sharon Campbell; and to whom these guidelines will be made available.

Mr. Freeman: Further guidance to health and local authorities is being prepared on the components of "care programmes".

Doctors and Nurses (Derbyshire)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of doctors and nurses in Derbyshire in 1979; and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the tables. Due to the 1982 NHS re-organisation, consistent data is not available for earlier years for these Districts.

[1] All figures independently rounded to nearest whole time equivalent (WTE).

[2] Figures includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff and exclude all consultants and senior registrars whose contracts are held by the regional health authority. The district health authority where those staff work cannot be identified centrally. There will therefore be more doctors and dentists actually working in North Derbyshire and Southern Derbyshire district health authorities than are accounted for in the table.

[3] Includes agency nursing and midwifery staff.

Grading Returns (Derbyshire)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make available the grading returns received from the Southern Derbyshire district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The grading returns specified the number of nursing and midwifery staff in each old grade that were assimilated to each of the new clinical grades. This information is given in the table.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As referred to in the Younger report on privacy, electronic listening devices are sometimes used in the observation of patients in hospitals.

Hospitals (Policy Decisions)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether prior to his proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients", he gathered information on the amount of time necessary to make decisions on general policy for the management of hospitals, and specifically on (a) organisation of services for in-patients and out-patients, (b) co-ordination of time-tables for staff-rotas and (c) organisation and control of funding exercises required for (i) adequate pay rewards for the medical, nursing and auxiliary staff, (ii) demands for changes in numbers of hospital staff and (iii) adequate provisions for the good operation of the different hospital units.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We undertook a comprehensive review of all relevant aspects of the NHS before bringing forward our proposals for change.

Hearing Loss

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he plans to provide to the public more information and a wider education programme on the facts surrounding loss of hearing.

Mr. Freeman: The Department publishes the booklet "How to use your hearing aid" which is issued free to all NHS hearing aid users. It gives useful general advice and includes reference to other services which may be of help to hearing impaired people. The Department of Social Security publishes leaflet NI 207 on occupational deafness which explains how industrial injuries disablement benefit may be claimed. There are no plans to issue any additional guidance at present. The Royal National Institute for the Deaf has however, referred to the need for better information for consumers in their "Fair Hearing" campaign document "Hearing Aids—The Case for Change", and we shall be considering this along with the other proposals that it has put forward.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to implement the Royal National Institute for the Deaf proposal, set out in the document "Hearing Aids—a Case for Change", for a new system of dispensing hearing aids, and helping the deaf or hard of hearing to obtain help;

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's review of its policy on hearing aid provision and services; what proposals he has to improve counselling to those who are deaf or hard of hearing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are grateful to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf for their comprehensive package of proposals relating to the provision of hearing aids. We have now received their refined proposals which take into account the comments they have received from other interested organisations. The issues involved are complex and because of the wide-ranging implications of any change in the present system of provision, we shall need to take time to consider them, in the light of the views of all concerned. We shall of course bear fully in mind the need for rehabilitation and after-care services for those who are deaf or hard of hearing.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to widen the range of hearing aids available on the National Health Service to cover cosmetically designed hearing aids.

Mr. Mellor: The National Health Service range of hearing aids is provided to ameliorate loss of hearing rather than for cosmetic reasons. In-the-ear hearing aids, which are sometimes regarded as more cosmetically acceptable, can be provided where an NHS consultant can see clear clinical reasons for doing so. Skin tone hearing aids are available in each of the NHS series of behind-the-ear aids.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will implement stricter regulations concerning compensation and maintenance cover for users of hearing aids;

(2) what is his policy towards free maintenance of hearing aids in the public and private sectors.

Mr. Mellor: Routine maintenance of all hearing aids issued under National Health Service arrangements is free. However, the cost of repair or replacement of a hearing aid may be recovered in cases of repeated loss or damage from patients or parents of children who are patients. Hearing aids provided by the private sector are the responsibility of my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Retinal Conditions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those centres within the National Health Service which currently specialise in the treatment of retinal conditions.

Mr. Freeman: All district health authorities have access to ophthalmology departments which treat retinal conditions, although some may have a particular interest in certain retinal conditions.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning centres currently undertaking research into retinal conditions.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is currently funding research for the screening of diabetic patients for diabetic retinopathy at Oxford, Sheffield and Exeter. A report of this work will be submitted later this year.

We are aware that work in this area is also being funded by some medical research charities.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's officials' involvement in investigations of the incidence of cryptosporidia in the water supply.

Mr. Freeman: An official of the Department is medical secretary to the expert group on cryptosporidium in water supplies, which was announced on 2 March by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State for Water and Planning at column 286; another attends its meetings as an observer. The Department monitors other outbreaks of cryptosporidiosis, irrespective of source, in association with the communicable disease surveillance centre which collects data on this disease.

Higher Diploma Examinations

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will raise with the relevant professional bodies the recommendation of the Hoffenberg committee that questions about brain stem death organ transplantation and related matters should be asked from time to time in higher diploma examinations in medicine, surgery and anaesthesia.

Mr. Freeman: The medical royal colleges are responsible for deciding the content of their examinations. However, officials wrote to the Conference of medical royal colleges on 10 November 1988, drawing attention to the relevant recommendation of the Hoffenberg report.

Body Scanners

Mr. Dave Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redwood) of 10 May, Official Report, column 450, and the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, 23 May, Official Report, column 488, he will take steps to obtain the information on whole body scanners in the West Midlands regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

In the next 12 months, new CT scanners are planned at Dudley road hospital, West Birmingham, and Selly Oak hospital, South Birmingham, both to be funded from health authority sources.

Creutzfeldt Jakob Dementia

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report, column 289, what alternative methods of monitoring Creutzfeldt Jakob dementia he is considering.

Mr. Freeman: We are seeking to establish a national register of all cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, validated by experts in this field. A similar methodology has been used with success in the past: details can be found in the Journal of Neurology, Neurosurgery and Psychiatry (1975) Vol. 38, pages 210-13 and (1988) Vol. 51, 1113-19.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department now possesses about the incidence of Creutzfeldt Jakob dementia.

Mr. Freeman: The mean annual mortality rate of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in England and Wales for the last period studied in detail (1980-84 inclusive) was 0·49 million. Currently, Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease is given on death certificates as the underlying cause of death in about 30 deaths a year.

Wakefield Family Practitioner Committee

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has issued guidelines on the number of members of the Wakefield family practitioner committee that should be appointed to meet hon. Members representing local constituencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have issued no such guidelines. It is a matter for individual FPCs to decide the level of representation at particular meetings.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he issued guidelines to the Wakefield family practitioner committee on when the White Paper "Working for Patients" should be considered and discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have issued no such guidelines. I welcome discussion by FPCs on the implications for implementing locally the proposals contained in the White Paper.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the chairman of the Wakefield family practitioner committee has been appointed an agent on behalf of the Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: FPCs are the Secretary of State's agents responsible for administering and managing family practitioner services. Chairmen and members are appointed by the Secretary of State and are accountable to him for the discharge of these duties.

Anaesthetics (Consent)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to introduce legislation to require that the parent or guardian of a minor signs the consent form for general anaesthetic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements for ensuring that patients (and parents or guardians where appropriate) are informed about proposed treatments and for obtaining their consent are under review. Revised guidance will be issued as soon as the review has been concluded. The Government has no plans to introduce legislation.

Population Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the population of each district health authority, the mortality rate for those aged under 75 years in each district health authority and the number of people aged over 85 years in each district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Estimates of resident population for district health authorities in England at mid-1987 are given in the tables. Mortality rates for particular age groups in each area can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Estimated resident population at mid-1987

Speech Therapists

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many speech therapists are employed by the Leicestershire health authority with special responsibility for work in schools; how many vacancies the Leicestershire health authority has for such speech therapists and for how long these vacancies have been open; what recruitment efforts are being made to fill these positions and whether these efforts include salary incentives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold the information centrally in the form requested. The hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of Leicestershire health authority for the information he seeks.

Medical and Dental Education

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The steering group, which contains representatives of all the major bodies concerned with undergraduate medical and dental education, was set up in November 1987 following a conference called by the permanent secretaries of my Department and the Department of Education and Science (Hansard, column 577-8, 18 November 1987). The steering group has now produced an interim report which clarifies the roles and responsibilities of the bodies concerned and makes recommendations relating to the principles underlying undergraduate medical and dental education, and to improved planning, management and information. I have today placed copies of the report in the Library.

Paragraph 4.30 of "Working for Patients" emphasised the Government's continuing commitment to maintaining the quality of medical education and research, and said that the steering group would develop its work and make recommendations in the light of the proposals in the White Paper.

The group began this second phase of its work by considering arrangements for the payment of the service increment for teaching (SIFT) which is designed to offset the excess service costs associated with medical education. The group has recommended that SIFT should continue to be paid through NHS channels and according to the following four principles which I have accepted.

(i) SIFT should be allocated to regions, pro-rata to student numbers;

(ii) Regions or Districts, as appropriate to local curcumstances, taking advice from medical and dental schools, should contract with hospitals (including self-governing hospitals) to provide service facilities for teaching in return for SIFT payments;

(iii) SIFT payments should be made in consultation with medical and dental schools and reflect the teaching activity in each hospital—if the number of students increased or decreased, the allocation of SIFT should be reconsidered;

(iv) while in the past sub-regional allocation of SIFT had been unspecific in many cases, in future payments from regions should be clearly identifiable to all parties as a recognition of the service costs of teaching.

The group has further work in hand and will offer recommendations as soon as they reach conclusions on the issues they must address.

Sight Tests

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will lay regulations relating to consumer safeguards on sight tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I intend shortly to lay before the House the Sight Testing (Examination and Prescription) Regulations. I have considered carefully comments made in the course of consultation on these regulations and I have decided in the light of those received that all sight tests, whether National Health Service or private must include a refraction, an eye examination and other tests appropriate for individual patients. In addition all patients will be given a copy of their optical prescription to enable them to shop around for spectacles in order to ensure that the competition which has developed in the optical market continues to grow. The regulations will not apply to people having sight tests for employment or insurance purposes or who are resident in hospital or who are referred to their general practitioner for further investigations or treatment. These will be the only exceptions.

In reaching my decision I noted with interest the intention of the General Optical Council to carry out within the next 12 months a wide-ranging programme of investigations in connection with my consultation document on sight tests. I have made it clear that I shall reconsider the sight test regulations in the light of the council's report.

TRANSPORT

Roads (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any of the new roads being considered by his London assessment studies, or the extension of the North Circular road across the east London river crossing are included in the list of projects for consideration as part of his toll road proposals.

Mr. Channon: The consultants reports on the assessment studies are expected in the summer. It is too early to say what road schemes may flow from the studies and whether any will involve tolls.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 16 May on the East London River Crossing at column 113.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Traffic Flows (Popham—M27)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the latest available summer and winter five-day and seven-day traffic flows for the M3/A33 route between Popham and the M27, for the following sections (a) Popham-Easton Lane, (b) Easton Lane-Bar End, (c) Bar End-Hockley, (d) Hockley-Compton, (e) Compton-Chandlers Ford and (f) Chandlers Ford-M27; and if he will list the peak hour flows for each direction separately for each section.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is not available on summer and winter traffic flows.

The estimated Annual Average Daily Flows (24 hours) for all motor vehicles for 1987 are as follows:

	All days	Weekdays
Popham-Easton Lane M3	19,300	20,500
Popham-Easton Lane A33	26,700	27,400
Easton Lane-Bar End A33	41,800	42,700
Bar End-Hockley A33	54,600	55,500
Hockley-Compton A33	54,500	56,100
Compton-Chandlers Ford A33	46,500	46,800
Chandlers Ford-M27 A33	25,600	25,700

There are limited data on peak flows. The information relates to May 1987 and is for combined directions, as follows.

	AM peak	PM peak
Popham-Easton Lane M3	2,948	2,954
Easton Lane A33	918	924
Bar End Road A33	1,204	1,119
Morestone Road A33	835	783
Compton-Chandlers Ford A33	5,116	4,777

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what length of the M3-A33 between Popham and the M27 is currently equipped with sensors in the carriageway lanes to detect queues and incidents; what is the spacing of these sensors; whether they indicate speeds of traffic; and for what length of road CCTV can be used to verify queueing or incidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Three queue detectors are provided at 500 m intervals on the southbound carriageway of the A33 between Bar End and Hockley. They are connected to a "Queue Ahead" sign 1·3 km north of Hockley traffic lights and a speed detector 2 km north of the traffic lights, which detects speeds above 50 mph.

CCTV cameras are sited at junction 9 on the M3 with an approximate viewing distance of 2 km north and south, and at A33 Hockley traffic lights viewing 1 km north and 300-400 m south. The camera at Hockley can also view traffic approaching A33 on the A333 (Ghost Corner) and B3335 Twyford with a viewing distance on the side roads of about 75 m.

Traffic Flows (A33-M3)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the present daily and peak-hour flows entering and leaving the A33-M3 at the following junctions: (a) M3/A34 interchange, Easton Lane, (b) Bar End, (c) Hockley, all movements, (d) Compton, northfacing slip roads, (e) Shawford, A31 junction, (f) Chandlers Ford and (g) M27 and A35 (northbound flows on to A33).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not available.

Winchester Bypass

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average lane occupancy in vehicles per mile of the A33 Winchester bypass in each direction in (a) offpeak and (b) peak hours; and what is the average speed recorded for each situation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not available.

A33 (Bar End-Compton)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the minor schemes and expenditure undertaken on the A33 between Bar End and Compton since the decision letter on the 1976-77 inquiry was issued in 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A33 Hockley crossroads £500,000.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average number of incidents per week significantly affecting traffic flow on the A33 between Bar End and Compton; and what is the average response time between an incident occurring on this length of dual carriageway and a recovery vehicle removing the vehicle or vehicles immobilised.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not held by the Department.

SS Ave

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he took to ascertain that the wages and conditions of the crew on the SS Ave, which recently called at Teesport and Immingham, conform to international regulations.

Mr. Portillo: The Ave was not visited by Department of Transport marine surveyors at Imingham or Teesport. A port state control inspection had been conducted in Rotterdam on 2 May 1989 and a valid inspection form issued.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the movements of the SS Ave which recently discharged a cargo of South African coal at Teesport.

Mr. Portillo: The Ave is believed to have arrived in Rotterdam from Maputo, Mozambique, and to have sailed from Rotterdam on 3 May. She arrived in Immingham later the same day, remaining there until 7 May when she sailed for Teesport. The Ave was in Teesport from 7 May until 13 May when she sailed bound for Hamburg.

Vehicles (Silencer Kits)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has concerning the safety implication of fitting air brake silencer kits to heavy goods vehicles;

(2) what recent representations he has received concerning the requirement that in order to qualify for a permit under the London area lorry scheme vehicles must be fitted with air brake silencer kits;

(3) when he last met the London boroughs transport scheme to discuss the issue of air brake silencer kits; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether he has had any consultations with representatives of the insurance industry concerning the invalidation of policies by the fitting of air brake silencer kits.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Secretary of State has not met the London boroughs transport scheme to discuss the issue of air brake silencer kits. A vehicle's braking system needs to ensure efficient responsive braking. It is for vehicle manufacturers to ensure that this is done. The possible use of air brake silencers should therefore be considered at design stage. If air brake silencers are fitted retrospectively, then as with any other modification, care must be taken. The air brake silencer must be carefully positioned and the manufacturer of the vehicle should be consulted before it is fitted. Good maintenance is essential.

We have not consulted the insurance industry. It is for vehicle operators to ensure that their insurance policies are not invalidated by any modifications they make to their vehicles.

Representations have been received on the issue of air brake silencers from the Freight Transport Association, the Road Haulage Association and the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders. We have also received a number of individual representations. The Freight Transport Association has challenged in the courts the requirements by the London boroughs transport scheme to fit brake silencer kits. The matter is currently the subject of a judicial review.

Birmingham cross-city Railway

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has seen and commented upon a draft proposal from British Rail to electrify the Birmingham cross-city railway line; on how many occasions the matter has been discussed between his Department and British Rail; which points of clarification have been sought by his Department; and when he expects British Rail to submit a formal investment proposal.

Mr. Portillo: Department of Transport officials have seen and commented upon a draft proposal from British Rail to electrify the Birmingham cross-city railway line and have had two meetings with British Rail to discuss it. The Department is currently awaiting clarification of various issues concerning the forecast net benefit of electrification costs. I expect British Rail to submit a formal investment proposal shortly.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date discussions took place between his Department and British Rail about the proposed electrification of the Birmingham cross-city railway line; whether such discussions are likely to lead to a formal investment proposal; whether any further work which British Rail has to do on the proposals arose as a result of informal discussion between the two parties; and what information he has on the extent of local interest in the possibility of converting the cross-city line into a Metro line.

Mr. Portillo: Informal discussions between Department of Transport officials and British Rail about the proposed electrification of the Birmingham cross-city railway line took place on 5 January 1989 and 21 April 1989. British Rail has further work to do on the proposal as a result of these discussions and is planning to make a formal investment proposal. Although the possibility of converting the cross-city line into a Metro line was raised in connection with the Birmingham integrated transportation study, I understand that it is not now being pursued as part of that study.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he expects British Rail to set out when submitting an investment proposal to him regarding the electrification of the Birmingham cross-city railway line.

Mr. Portillo: We expect British Rail to demonstrate that the proposed electrification would represent better value for money than other options, in particular providing a modern diesel service.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to take the decision on approval of the electrification of the cross-city line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We can decide only when we have received a formal investment proposal from British Rail.

Vehicles (M6)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will assess the effectiveness of the exercise by Staffordshire county constabulary in surveying vehicles on the M6 to discover how many were unfit for use; and if he will take steps to encourage chief constables to undertake similar exercises.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The types of vehicle check carried out by Staffordshire police are effective both in enforcing the law and increasing inter-agency co-operation. The Department's enforcement staff will continue to assist the police in similar exercises on the M6 and elsewhere.

M4 Motorway

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for the M6 motorway between junctions 4 and 10A (a) the designed hourly capacity, (b) the daily traffic flow, (c) the peak time hourly traffic flow, (d) the hourly peak time through traffic, (e) the total traffic flow between the hours of 8 pm and 8 am and (f) the number of heavy goods vehicles per day, in each case: (i) at present and (ii) estimated for 1995 and 2005.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer Thursday 25 May 1989]: The Department uses design reference flows rather than traffic flow standards when designing motorways. These indicate only the starting point for detailed operational and economic assessment of options. The Department's design reference flows for a dual three-lane motorway—which describes the M6 between junctions 4 and 10A—range from 50,000 to 79,000 vehicles per annual average day in the design year (15 years after the year in which the road opens). However, the maximum capacity of any road in terms of throughput is considerably more than its "design flow" and will vary with the vehicle mix, road layout, time of day, time of year, and driving conditions.

The latest estimates of the annual average daily flow (AADF) for the M6 between junctions 4 and 10A relate to 1987. The figures are given in the following table.

Estimated annual average daily flow[1] of all vehicles and of heavy goods vehicles on specified links of the M6: 1987

Junction	All motor vehicles	HGVs
4-5	71,000	14,200
5-6	77,200	13,810
6-7	98,300	18,580
7-8	115,000	24,850
8-9	111,500	21,930
9-10	110,300	21,540
10-10A	n.a.	n.a.

n.a. = not available.

Counts for peak flows and for flows between 8 pm and 8 am are available for only some of these links. The information is in the following table:

Average weekday peak hour and 8 pm and 8 am flows on specified links and for specified dates on the M6

Junction	Date	Average weekday: Peak hour	Peak flow	8 pm-8 am
4A-5 North	February 1989	8 am-9 am	5,700	14,200
4A-5 South	February 1989	5 pm-6 pm	6,000	14,000
5-6 South	February 1989	5 pm-6 pm	5,300	12,500
6-7 North	September 1988	3 pm-4 pm	3,700	15,800
8W-9 South	March 1989	4 pm-5 pm	6,700	17,000
9-10 North	March 1989	5 pm-6 pm	5,900	17,700
9-10 South	March 1989	4 pm-5 pm	5,800	18,000

Note: Separate data for goods vehicles are not available.

Estimates of through traffic were made for two links of this section of the M6 in 1984 and are given in the table.

Proportion of 12 hour daytime flow estimated as through traffic by type of vehicle and for specified junctions on the M6: 1984

Junction	All vehicles	Heavy vehicles
	Per cent.	Per cent.
4A-5	35	45
10-10A	50	57

The Department prepares forecasts of national traffic. Where specific trunk road improvements are being assessed local traffic forecasts are prepared. Projections are not otherwise made for specific roads.

Dursban

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions are placed on the transport of the chemical Dursban; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the appropriate regulations are being observed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer Friday 26 May 1989]: Dursban is not listed as a dangerous substance in transport legislation. It is an organo-phosphate insecticide, approved under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. These regulations make general provisions requiring any person selling, supplying or storing pesticides to take all reasonable precautions, particularly with regard to storage and transport, to protect human health, fauna and flora and the environment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the United Kingdom balance of payments for 1989.

Mr. Major: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for 1989-90 shows a forecast deficit for the current account of the balance of payments in 1989 of £14½ billion.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in visible goods in 1989.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in visible goods in 1989.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in visible goods in 1989.

Mr. Major: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for 1989-90 shows a forecast deficit for visible trade in 1989 of £21½ billion.

Prices and Taxes Indexes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to make to the release dates for the retail index and the tax and price index, on his assumption of responsibility for their publication.

Mr. Lilley: None.

Inflation

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current inflation rate in the United Kingdom; and what it was one year ago.

Mr. Lilley: The all-items RPI annual inflation rate in April 1989 was 8 per cent., and was 3·9 per cent. in April 1988. The underlying rate of inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments, was 5·9 per cent. in April 1988.

Married Man's Tax Allowance

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent consideration he has given to the married man's tax allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: When independent taxation begins in April 1990 the present structure of income tax allowances will be replaced by the personal allowance and the married couple's allowance. A husband and wife will each have their own personal allowance and the new system will continue to recognise marriage through the married couple's allowance. This will be given in the first instance to the husband. The personal allowance and the married couple's allowance will together be equivalent to the present married man's allowance.

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the repayment of the public sector debt held by foreign-owned institutions.

Mr. Lilley: It is not possible to provide the information requested. However, table 8 of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin and table 2·6 of Financial Statistics show transactions in marketable Government debt by the overseas sector.

Exports

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made for the growth of exports for 1989 as against 1988.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) on 4 May at columns 203-4.

Tax Reform

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out Government policy on tax reform.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government's programme of tax reform has sought to create a climate in which businesses can thrive and individual initiative and risk taking are rewarded. A major objective has been to leave people more of their own money, so that they can choose for themselves what to do with it. In particular the Government have reduced marginal tax rates so that an extra pound of earnings or profits is really worth having. We have reduced the basic rate of income tax from 33 to 25 per cent. and set a target of 20 per cent. Business taxation has been radically restructured, leaving the main United Kingdom corporation tax rate at 35 per cent. one of the lowest in the industrialised world. Five major taxes have been abolished completely.

We have also tried to ensure that, as a general rule, people's choices are distorted by the tax system as little as reasonably possible. In general the objective is to charge lower rates on a broader base; thereby improving incentives and reducing distortions. However the Government have also been prepared, when it it sensible, to promote well-targeted tax reliefs which will help to make the economy work better. Other important objectives have been to provide a fair deal for married women and to simplify the tax system.

Taxation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the percentage of average wages paid in tax in all kinds, (b) the percentage paid in income tax and (c) the percentage paid in indirect taxes for each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the estimates placed in the Library of the House in reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 13 April at column 624.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Major: The level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1985 prices was £11,157 million in 1979 and £11,586 million in 1988.

Sterling M3

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the cumulative growth in sterling M3 from 1979 to the present;

(2) what was the cumulative growth in sterling M3 from May 1979 to 1984 and from 1984 to the present;

(3) what was the average growth of sterling M3 in the years 1970 to 1974, 1974 to 1979, 1979 to 1983 onwards;

(4) what was the percentage growth of sterling M3 in each year since 1970.

Mr. Lilley: Sterling M3 was retitled M3 in 1987. Figures from M3 from 1963 to 1988 were published in the January 1989 volume of Financial Statistics; more recent data are available in subsequent numbers of Financial Statistics or in Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin. Annex 7 of "Breaks in Monetary Series" (Bank of England discussion paper No. 23) discusses the calculation of growth rates of monetary series.

Petrol

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the withdrawal of two-star leaded petrol by the major oil companies; and what assessment his Department has made of the difficulties created for drivers of older vehicles by the suggested use instead of four-star leaded petrol.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the withdrawal of two-star leaded petrol by some major oil companies. Many engines which formerly ran on two-star petrol can use unleaded fuel. Those which cannot are able to use four-star leaded petrol without difficulty.

Taxation (EEC)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in a similar manner to his written answer of 24 March 1988, Official Report, columns 195-6, the likely effects on tax rates and yields in the United Kingdom of the latest proposals from the Commission of the European Communities for harmonising value added tax, showing net and gross yields, respectively.

Mr. Lilley: The Commission's latest proposals are not specific either on the level of the suggested minimum standard rate of VAT or on the scope of future zero rates. I regret, therefore, that it is not possible to update the previous tables.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report in a manner similar to that of his written answer of 23 March 1988, Official Report columns 124-26, the effect on excise duties of adoption of the latest proposals of the Commission of the European Economic Community for harmonising national taxes on alcohol, tobacco and hydrocarbon oils and fuels.

Mr. Lilley: The latest Commission proposals contain no suggested rates for excise duties. I regret, therefore, that it is not possible at this stage to provide the information requested.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why were a quantity of African elephant tusks detained by Customs and Excise in the Flying Tigers customs shed at Heathrow airport on 20 April 1989; for whom and where the tusks were to be delivered; and what was the total weight of ivory involved.

Mr. Lilley: Five consignments of raw ivory are currently held at the airport at Heathrow. Two have been seized and three were detained on 12 April. The validity of the export permits produced for this ivory is being checked by the international ivory trade monitoring unit. No further details can be given at this stage.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide full details of all shipments of ivory by nature, value, country of origin and documentation discrepancy currently being detained at British ports of entry.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: Details of individual consignments where Customs action is not yet completed cannot be disclosed.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cargoes of ivory are currently at British ports of entry in transit to other destinations; and what are those destinations.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: Information on such cargoes is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Scottish Bank Notes

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Treasury has had any recent communications with Scottish banks about the issue of Scottish bank notes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the people appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations whose services were secured by executive search and selection agencies.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of running the Government's quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The figures for the years 1979 to 1988, at current prices, are as follows:

£ million

	Amount of gross expenditure provided by Government	Other associated expenditure by sponsoring Departments
1979	2,970	70
1980	3,080	72
1981	3,860	94
1982	3,910	87
1983	5,120	94
1984	5,160	115
1985	5,100	111
1986	5,330	116
1987	5,690	112
1988	5,930	118

Figures for 1989 will be published in "Public Bodies" later this year.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is his policy to use the services of executive search and selection agencies to recruit people for quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The procedures adopted for identifying and selecting candidates for public appointments are the responsibility of the Minister making the appointment. The use by Government of executive search and selection agencies is limited.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which executive search and selection agencies have been used to recruit people for quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to eply.

This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the revenue yield from capital gains tax for the fiscal year ended April 1989; and what it was in the year ended April 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Receipts from capital gains tax in the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89 were respectively £1,379 million and £2,323 million. These figures exclude receipts from capital gains of companies and taxed within corporation tax.

YTS

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the regulations covering tax liability on YTS earnings with regard to partial refunds of travel or lodging costs necessarily incurred in taking part in YTS.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 May 1989]: Payments in respect of costs incurred on travelling and accommodation are only made to YTS trainees who are not employees. These payments are not liable to income tax.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines have been issued to employers, sponsors and managing agents on the position of young people on YTS in relation to PAYE and NIC.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 May 1989]: No special guidance on the position of young people on YTS who are taken on as employees is needed. Employers apply the same PAYE and NIC rules as for all other employees. However, the YTS allowances are below the tax and NIC thresholds, so that no tax or NIC will be payable if the employee's only income is the basic allowance.

As regards trainees who are not employees, the basic allowance is not taxable. Nor are these trainees taxed on payments to which they are also entitled in respect of travel and accommodation costs. The Training Agency's "Managing Agent's Handbook" advises YTS providers to seek advice from the local tax or DSS office if they propose to make payments over and above the basic allowance.

Charitable Gifts (Tax Relief)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will amend the give-as-you-earn scheme to enable the tax relief to accrue to the benefit of the donor's designated charity.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 25 May 1989]: No. Charities already benefit from the tax relief given to employees on their donations under the payroll giving scheme. Every £1 a basic rate taxpayer gives costs him only 75p.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the number of prosecutions for tax fraud, the total number of people involved and the amount of money involved in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The Inland Revenue keeps aggregate figures for prosecutions in England and Wales. Separate figures for Wales could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tax Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportion of gross income paid in income tax, national insurance contributions and value added tax by (a) a married man with a non-earning wife and two children and (b) a married man with an earning wife and two children at one half, one and a half, two, three, five and 10 times national average earnings in 1989-90; and what were the comparable figures in 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1989, c. 560]: I regret that the original tables contained an error. The amended tables are as follows:

Married man with non-earning wife and two children

	Multiples of average male earnings
Proportion of gross earnings	½	1	1½	2	3	5	10
1978-79
Income tax	−4·1	14·4	20·6	23·6	32·0	47·1	64·7
NICs	6·5	6·5	5·6	4·2	2·8	1·7	0·8
VAT	—	2·7	2·7	—	—	—	—
1989-90
Income tax	−1·0	12·0	16·4	20·2	26·8	32·1	36·1
NICs	7·9	8·4	6·8	5·1	3·4	2·0	1·0
VAT	—	5·0	5·7	—	—	—	—

Married man with earning wife and two children

	Multiples of average male earnings
Proportion of gross earnings	½	1	1½	2	3	5	10
1978-79
Income tax	−11·1	6·4	15·2	19·7	25·9	32·9	50·6
NICs	6·5	6·5	6·5	6·5	5·4	3·4	1·7
VAT	—	3·4	3·4	—	—	—	—
1989-90
Income tax	−10·6	7·1	13·1	16·3	20·7	27·0	33·6
NICs	5·4	7·5	8·3	8·4	6·8	4·1	2·0
VAT	—	5·9	6·0	—	—	—	—

Notes:

1. Average male earnings in 1989-90 are assumed to be £273·10 per week, 7½ per cent. higher than in 1988-89. This represents a real increase of over 30 per cent. since 1978-79.
2. Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax.
3. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay class 1 National Insurance contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for National Insurance contributions are financial year averages.
4. The two earner couple is assumed to have joint earnings equal to the various multiples of average earnings, split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.
5. The estimates of VAT are derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. Estimates cannot reliably be made outside the range of 75 per cent. to 150 per cent. of average male earnings.

DEFENCE

Radiation

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce new compensation arrangements for British ex-servicemen who have suffered radiation ailments arising from their duties.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Trident

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on present progress in the development of the new Trident nuclear warhead at the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Sainsbury: The development of the Trident warhead is progressing satisfactorily towards the Trident submarine in-service date of the mid-1990s.

Helicopters (Forced Landing)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why five British military helicopters were forced to land by the actions of other military aircraft in West Germany on Friday 19 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The aircraft were taking part in a pre-planned training manoeuvre.

Royal Arsenal, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the redevelopment of that part of the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich which has been declared surplus to his Department's requirements.

Mr. Neubert: Following the announcement by my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) on 9 March 1989 of our intention to relocate the director general of defence quality assurance to Teesside, discussions with the London borough of Greenwich have now been held to consider arrangements for the release of the entire Woolwich Arsenal west site. The Crown estate commissioners, part owners of the site, were also present and a useful exchange of views took place.

Further meetings are planned to continue this dialogue from which we would expect detailed proposals for the redevelopment of the site to emerge.

F111 Aircraft (Upper Heyford)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the number of (a)

engine failures, (b) engine shutdowns and (c) pieces of aircraft falling from planes on F111 aircraft from RAF Upper Heyford in the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: I understand that it is not the practice of the United States Air Force to release this information.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South of 23 May, what were the differences in the United States of America and British nuclear test objectives, and in the doses of radiation received by American and British service men, and in the protective measures taken.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the right hon. Member on 23 May at column 464.

Listening Devices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether electronic surveillance listening devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: There are many weapons systems and other items of defence equipment in service which use electronic surveillance techniques.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to reduce the strength of the Ministry of Defence police force over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave to the hon. and learned member on 27 February at column 43.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the establishment and (b) the strength of the Ministry of Defence police force in each of the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is as follows:

	Complement	Strength
September 1984	4,229	4,003
September 1985	4,563	4,255
September 1986	4,990	4,681
December 1987	5,001	4,841
December 1988	4,962	4,706

The details are taken from the chief constable's annual reports, which from 1987 relate to calendar years.

CSCE Talks

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has commissioned any studies on the minimum strength of forces necessary to defend Western Europe in the event that the CSCE talks in Vienna achieve parity between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Warsaw pact forces.

Mr. Neubert: The NATO proposals tabled in Vienna were undepinned by studies which showed that they provided sufficient forces to maintain the forward defence of western Europe. The studies indicated that further significant reductions in tanks, artillery, etc., could have serious implications for NATO's ability to maintain forward defence, as it is currently understood.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is being taken to eradicate shortages of staff in the procurement executive of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Management action is already in hand to alleviate the problems identified in the recently published House of Commons Defence Committee report. These measures include the application of new and more flexible long term Civil Service pay agreements, the proposed relocation of a substantial part of the procurement executive to parts of the country where it is easier to recruit and retain staff, and the next steps initiative. The shortages tend to be concentrated in disciplines such as electronics and information technology, and in certain geographical areas especially London and the south-east. To a large extent they are a reflection of shortages from which other major employers suffer in these areas.

Type 23 Frigate

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the proposals by Ferranti Computer Systems for a command and control system for the type 23 frigate; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to the use of penalty clauses in the contracts for the command and control system for the type 23 frigate;

(3) what measures he is taking to ensure that production difficulties are minimised in the development and manufacture of the command control system for the type 23 frigate.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the statement that I made to the House during this year's Navy debate on 28 February at columns 166-67.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to invite tenders for additional type 23 frigates; and to which companies he will extend that invitation.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer that I gave on 28 April at column 686.

War Service Pensions

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current policy of Her Majesty's Government in relation to service during the Korean war counting towards war service pensions; and whether he has any plans to review it.

Mr. Neubert: Pensions awarded under the scheme for the armed forces do not distinguish between war service and other periods of service. For those personnel of the armed forces who qualify for an award of pension based on length of service given, any service during the Korean war would count on an equal footing with other periods.

There are no plans for a review. Those suffering disability as a result of injury received during the Korean war may, however, be eligible for the award of pension under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security, without regard to the length of service given.

Royal Naval Personnel (School Boarding Allowances)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it would cost to allow seagoing Royal Naval personnel, on shore postings, to claim boarding school allowances, irrespective of the locations of their families.

Mr. Neubert: The total cost of boarding school allowance for Royal Navy personnel is estimated at £24 million for the financial year 1989-90, based on the number of personnel who have drawn the allowance in the past. No reduction has been assumed for the future since it is expected that the great majority of claimants, including those on shore postings, will comply with the new family mobility conditions.

Royal Naval Officers (Travel)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it would cost to restore first class travel warrants to Royal Naval officers on the scale prevailing before the 1988 review of allowances.

Mr. Neubert: Since facilities for first class duty travel remain unaltered, it is assumed that my hon. Friend is concerned with first class leave travel. The restoration of this facility to eligible officers of the armed forces as a whole would cost an estimated £820,000 of which the Royal Navy's share is approximately £165,000.

"Who Framed Colin Wallace"

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an inquiry into the evidence presented in the book entitled "Who Framed Colin Wallace", by Mr. Paul Foot, that members of the Army information services (a) planted hoax bombs, (b) masqueraded as members of paramilitary groups and (c) carried and possessed captured terrorist weapons and explosives.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has anything to add to his answer to the hon. Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller), Official Report, column 707, 20 July 1988, in the light of information in the book, "Who Framed Colin Wallace", regarding the address to which the alleged information policy document was delivered.

Mr. Neubert: The answer referred to by the hon. Member stated that a classified document was delivered by Mr. Wallace to the London home of a journalist on The Times. The document was in fact left by Mr. Wallace at the Northern Ireland address of the journalist.

Exercise Wintex-Cimex

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what lessons have been learned from the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercise, Wintex-Cimex; how many British service personnel took part and of what ranks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Exercise Wintex-Cimex was the tenth in a series of NATO-wide command post exercises conducted by Alliance members. The exercise took place from 24 February to 9 March 1989. Its objective was to test command, control and consultation plans and procedures and to exercise the appropriate crisis management machinery which would be used in the defence of NATO countries in times of international tension or war. This was successfully achieved. Detailed assessment and evaluation of all aspects of the exercise are currently being carried out.

Though it is not our practice to comment in detail on such matters, all the indications are that useful lessons will have been learnt and that considerable value and experience was gained by those taking part. There was widespread military participation from the chiefs of staff downwards, but information on the numbers of British service participants in total or by rank is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Clayton (Overflying)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why, on 23 May, there was a continuous day-long succession of military jet aircraft overflying the village of Clayton in the constituency of Don Valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The amount of flying activity in particular areas is influenced by several factors, some of which are unpredictable. These include the weather, the location of major exercises and the availability of range and other facilities. On this occasion however, there is no indication that there was an unusual level of activity in the relevant area. As far as low flying is concerned, the aim remains to spread the training as widely and evenly as possible throughout the entire country to ensure that, as far as practicable, no area receives an undue share.

Army Quarters, Hampshire

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings in Hampshire owned by his Department for use as army quarters have been offered for sale; and, of these, how many have been sold.

Mr Neubert: A total of 105 Army married quarters in Hampshire were offered for sale in the financial year 1987-88 and two in 1988-89. All have now been sold. Since 1 April 1989 one further Army married quarter has been offered for sale.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Department for use as army quarters are currently unoccupied and surplus to requirements (a) in Hampshire and (b) in the Romsey and Waterside constituency.

Mr. Neubert: (a) In Hampshire, as at 31 March 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, out of a total stock of 4,622 Army married quarters 620 were unoccupied, of which 154 have been identified as surplus to requirements. These figures exclude the Tidworth estates, where the county boundary runs through the camp and a split by county is not readily available.

(b) In the Romsey and Waterside constituency, as at 31 March 1989, out of a total stock of 349 Army married quarters 77 were unoccupied, of which 10 had been identified as surplus to requirements.

Plessey plc

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he proposes to ensure continued effective competition among defence suppliers in the event that, following the proposed acquisition of the Plessey company by GEC/Siemens, these Plessey business areas become wholly-owned subsidiaries of the German company, Siemens.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD's procurement policy will continue to be based on the maximum possible use of competition, involving not only the companies that would result from a merger if it took place, but other defence suppliers. Where the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report has identified specific adverse effects resulting from the proposed merger, it has recommended undertakings to secure a remedy. These are currently under negotiation.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being sought to satisfy United Kingdom national security requirements in the event that, following the acquisition of Plessey by GEC and Siemens, Plessey radar and Plessey defence systems become wholly-owned subsidiaries of the German company, Siemens.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence gave evidence to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry on the security issues raised by the proposed merger. The MMC recognised the MOD's concerns in their recommendation that national security undertakings as to the ownership and management of certain activities had to be secured to remedy the adverse effect of the merger. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry placed responsibility on the MOD to secure these undertakings. Negotiations are proceeding, and it would be inappropriate to comment further at this stage.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking, in view of the highly integrated nature of Plessey's research facilities, to ensure that GEC does not exercise influence over Plessey's radar and defence systems businesses in the event that they succeed in acquiring the Plessey company.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report recommended, inter alia, that GEC should undertake not to acquire any interest in or influence or control over the management of the Plessey radar and defence systems businesses. The Office of Fair Trading is currently negotiating to this end, consulting the Ministry of Defence as necessary.

Belize

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what benefit in training British forces obtain from being stationed in Belize; and what is his assessment of their value.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The commitment to Belize provides an opportunity for units and equipment to be tested in a demanding environment. Advantage is taken of the possibilities for jungle and adventure training, and field firing practice, whenever possible. Training is conducted jointly by ground, air and naval forces, and with the Belize defence force. These facilities are a valuable by-product of the Belize commitment.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to make changes in the commitment of British forces to Belize.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces are in Belize at the request of the Belize Government, and will remain for an appropriate period to assist with that country's external defence and the training of the Belize defence force. This remains the basis of the Belize commitment.

Headquarter Contracts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the reasons for the sevenfold increase in the level of payments for headquarter contracts awarded by his Department to British Telecommunications plc in the two years to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 May 1989]: There has not been the significant increase in the actual level of payments to British Telecommunications plc which the answers to the hon. Member's previous questions might imply.

During the period covered by the replies, changes were introduced into Departmental accounting arrangements which brought more payments to British Telecommunications plc into the ambit of the headquarters payment process. On a comparable basis payments in 1985-86 would have been some £50 million.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, regarding storage of radioactive waste for which there is presently no disposal site available, whether the nuclear installations inspectorate is required to licence storage sites operated by the Ministry of Defence or by sub-contractors to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 May 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

A site owned and operated by the Ministry of Defence requires no licensing (although, as in all these matters, Ministers are able to give assurances that such a site would be constructed and operated under conditions no less stringent than those imposed on licensed sites). If a site is operated by contractors to MoD, whether or not it is owned by MoD, licensing is required.

PRIME MINISTER

Overseas Aid

Q13. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government expect to achieve the United Nations target of 0·7 per cent. gross national product for overseas aid.

The Prime Minister: The Government accept this target in principle but like previous Administrations and many other donors are not able to set a date for achieving it. Progress towards it must depend upon developments in the economy and other claims on our resources. The aid programme is now growing in real terms and its quality is high.

Single European Act

Q55. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will present proposals to the Madrid European Council about the volume and nature of the directives stemming from the Single European Act.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so, but I do expect the European Council in Madrid to review progress on completion of the single market.

Nicaraguan President

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with President Ortega of Nicaragua, she discussed the role to be played by the non-aligned movement in strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation treaty at its fourth review conference in 1990.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nigerian President

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during the recent visit of the President of Nigeria, she discussed the ways in which the nuclear non-proliferation treaty can be strengthened at its fourth review conference in 1990.

The Prime Minister: No.

Israeli Prime Minister

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during the visit of the Prime Minister of Israel to the United Kingdom on 21-22 May, she raised the questions of (a) the possibility of Israel signing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and (b) the danger of nuclear weapons proliferation in the middle east.

The Prime Minister: No, but we have raised this issue regularly with the Government of Israel.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on her meeting with the Prime Minister of the state of Israel on 22 May.

The Prime Minister: My meeting with Mr. Shamir was held in a friendly spirit reflecting the good relations between Britain and Israel. We discussed Arab-Israel matters, other regional issues and bilateral questions. I welcomed his proposals for elections in the occupied territories as a useful step forward but emphasised the need for an understanding on a solution based on territory for peace.

London Traffic

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Prime Minister who has overall responsibility for the expedition of London's traffic.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility rests with the Secretary of State for Transport, the London local authorities and the police.

The Secretary of State is the highway authority for trunk roads in London. At the request of the London local authorities he is also responsible for London's urban traffic control systems and all London's traffic lights. The local authorities are the highway and traffic authorities for local roads in their areas. The Metropolitan and City of London police are responsible for the enforcement of traffic and parking laws, and deal with incidents arising from traffic control.

War Widows (Housing Benefit)

Sir George Young: To ask the Prime Minister whether the arrangements for disregarding war widows' pensions for housing benefit purposes are the same in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: No. The housing benefit scheme for England, Scotland and Wales has a statutory disregard, currently set at £5 a week, of any war disablement or war widow's pension, and local authorities have discretion to enhance this disregard. The separate housing benefit scheme in Northern Ireland has a statutory disregard of all such pensions.

Political Clubs

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning the use by Government agencies of premises located in political clubs; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Government Departments should not use premises located in political clubs for official purposes unless no suitable alternative is available. Non-departmental public bodies and Government contractors are responsible for their own operational arrangements.

Disabled Persons (Employment)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister what is the number of disabled persons employed by (a) the Cabinet Office, and (b) at 10 Downing street; what these figure are as a percentage of the total work force; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There are 16 registered disabled persons employed by the Cabinet Office, which represents approximately 1 per cent. of the total work force, and none at 10 Downing street. The Cabinet Office is an equal opportunities employer, and continually seeks to encourage the employment of disabled people.

Green Issues

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the need to set up a new department concerned with green issues; what discussions she has had on this matter; and when they were held.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Environment has lead responsibility for environmental issues. I have no present plans to set up a new department to deal with such issues.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 June.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 June.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 June.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Petitions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of public petitions presented in each session since 1970.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

Session	Number of petitions
1970–71	8
1971–72	21
1972–73	25
1973–74	6

[1] To 26 May 1989.

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish in the Official Report a list of private Members' Bills where a Division took place on Second Reading, and where the Bill subsequently did not receive Royal Assent in each Session since 1970.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

1971-72
Care of the Elderly Bill[1]

1972-73
Penalties for Murder Bill[2]
Council House (Tenant's Representation) Bill

1974
Companies Bill[1]

1974-75
Abortion (Amendment) Bill

Hand-delivered Items

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will end the practice whereby hand-delivered items to the Palace of Westminster have to bear postage stamps.

Mr. Wakeham: Under the existing regulations one unstamped letter may be accepted from a Stranger, on a sitting day, for delivery to a right hon. or hon. Member. I have no plans to change these arrangements at present. However, if my hon. Friend has any proposals in mind, may I suggest that, in the first instance, he contacts the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-Maintained Schools

27. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of schools which have opted for grant-maintained status.

32. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications have been received by his Department from schools wishing to become grant-maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Television Licences (Pensioners)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the introduction of free television licences for retirement pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Since 1 January this year, we have received five letters—in four cases referred to us by hon. Members—seeking the introduction of free television licences for retirement pensioners.

Television Licences

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to permit war widows the same concession with regard to television licences as residents in sheltered accommodation.

Mr. Renton: The concessionary TV licence is available to retirement pensioners and disabled people who live in residential or nursing homes, or in equivalent sheltered housing provided by a local authority or a housing association. There are no plans to extend the concession.

Barrow Borough Transport Ltd.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cumbria as to any investigations being undertaken into the activities of former directors and executives of Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. arising from the finding of the administrators appointed to oversee the company.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the police are not conducting any inquiries into this case.

Radio Tara

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken since receiving a request from the Independent Broadcasting Authority that representations be made to the Irish Government seeking alteration to the Radio Tara, Atlantic 252, aerial siting or its configuration.

Mr. Renton: We have made representations to the Irish authorities and await their reply.

Her Majesty's Prison, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many rule 43 prisoners are held in the segregational unit at Her Majesty's prison, Leicester; and what proposals he has for improving the conditions in this unit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 June 1989]: On 5 June 1989, one prisoner was held in the segregation unit at Leicester prison under rule 43 for the maintenance of good order or discipline. There are no proposals for improving the conditions in that unit.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the extent and effect on the running of gym, exercise and education periods of staff shortages at Her Majesty's prison Leicester; and if he has any plans to reverse this situation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The PE department currently has a full complement of four full-time PE officers and the PE programme does not suffer from staff shortages. However, for the 12 months prior to 15 May 1989 the department did run with one PE officer short. This caused 90 classes to be cancelled. Nevertheless, the inmates spent some 29,248 hours on physical education from May 1988 to May 1989.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vienna Convention

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the 82 states which voted for the adoption of the 1978 Vienna convention on succession of states in respect of treaties; and if he will indicate which of those countries have moved to ratification.

Mr. Eggar: According to the official records of the conference, the Vienna convention on succession of states in respect of treaties was adopted on 22 August 1978 by 76 votes in favour (including the United Kingdom) to none against with four abstentions. Subsequently two of those countries which had abstained informed the UN Secretariat that they had received authorisation to support the convention. This was not a roll call vote and the records do not list who among the 94 participating countries voted in favour.

As at 31 December 1988 the following countries had ratified the convention: Dominica, Egypt, Ethiopia, Iraq, Morocco, Seychelles, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

Katyn Massacre

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's studies of Soviet involvement in the Katyn massacre taking account of the recent statement by the Polish Government on this matter.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are following developments closely. There is substantial circumstantial evidence pointing to Soviet responsibility for the massacre. We urge the Soviet authorities to help establish the facts once and for all.

Cambodia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on Vietnamese troop withdrawals from Kampuchea; and what development he envisages in Her Majesty's Government's policies on recognition of (a) the coalition Government of democratic Kampuchea or (b) the state of Cambodia PRK.

Mr. Eggar: Vietnam has withdrawn some troops from Cambodia, but significant numbers remain. We welcome Vietnam's stated intention of withdrawing fully by September.

We recognise states, not Governments, and have dealings with neither the CGDK nor the PRK. We currently for see no change in this policy.

Egypt

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion Her Majesty's Government have had with the Egyptian authorities about the use of torture of political detainees in Egypt.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Hong Kong (Ivory Trade)

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Hong Kong Government concerning the trade in ivory in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: We have informed the Hong Kong Government about our decision to support a ban on trade in new ivory. They are now urgently reviewing their position.

Abduction

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received during the present Parliament about the abduction and taking abroad by their foreign-born fathers of the children of United Kingdom citizen mothers; what information he has of the numbers of such children and the countries where they are now believed to reside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to the reply, 23 May 1989, c. 455]: Foreign and Commonwealth consular records are kept on an individual case-by-case basis. However, it has been possible to identify 56 cases in which Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers have received, during the present Parliament, representations about British children who have been taken overseas or are being kept overseas against the wishes of their mothers in the United Kingdom.

The following table gives details of the number of cases together with the countries to which the children have been taken or in which they are believed to be being kept.

In five of these cases—one in Cyprus, two in the United States of America, one in Yemen Arab Republic and one in Yugoslavia—custody of one or more of the children concerned has now been restored to their mothers in the United Kingdom.

TRANSPORT

Lichfield—Redditch Railway Line

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received British Rail's submission for the electrification of the cross city line from Lichfield to Redditch via Birmingham New Street.

Mr. Portillo: Not yet.

Heavy Vehicles

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor car axle-load movements of 12-cwt could be undertaken to equate with the equivalent damage caused by 1,000 12-ton axle-load lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Except for special vehicles, 12-ton axle loads are not allowed. The road wear from 1,000 12-ton axle-load movements would be about the same as from 160 million 12-cwt axle loads.

Speed Limits

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of how much the kinetic energy as affecting road surfaces has increased through the raising of speed limits (a) of lorries from 50 to 60 mph and (b) of coaches from 60 to 70 mph.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Detailed research into this aspect of road wear is still in progress. The interplay of the different vehicle forces and suspension types is complex, and the effect on the road surface varies according to speed and loading. Current indications are that, at higher speeds, dynamic effects increase the loading on road surfaces. The increases are small and are countered by the improved load spreading properties of most roads at such speeds. The research programme is aimed at determining where the balance between these opposing effects lies.

Barrow Borough Transport Ltd.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date Barrow-in-Furness borough council applied to him for approval for the council to guarantee with National Westminster bank plc the overdraft facilities of Barrow Borough Transport Ltd.; and what was his reply.

Mr. Portillo: Barrow-in-Furness borough council applied to the Secretary of State for Transport for approval to guarantee an overdraft facility on 12 August 1988 and submitted further information in support of this application on 16 September and 13 October. The application was, however, overtaken by subsequent events leading up to the appointment of administrators on 21 December.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on what date Barrow-in-Furness borough council applied to him to make loans to Barrow Borough Transport Ltd.; and what was his reply;

(2) what information he has as to the total amount of loans made by the Barrow-in-Furness borough council to Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. and as to between what dates these loans were made; and whether he gave his prior consent to the making of such loans under section 79 of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Portillo: We were informed in December 1988 by the council that it had made certain payments on behalf of the company between October 1986 and March 1987 and were asked whether consent was needed. We indicated that retrospective consent was not possible. Otherwise no application for consent to loans has been received and I have no information on loans made by the council to the company. The council does not need the Secretary of State's consent to make loans in connection with the provision or improvement of assets, provided that such loans are on terms no more favourable than those on which the authority can itself borrow.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to (a) how many directors were appointed at any one time to the board of directors of Barrow Borough Transport Ltd., (b) how many of these directors were also councillors on Barrow-in-Furness borough council and (c) the financial status of such appointees.

Mr. Portillo: We have no specific knowledge on these points.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to (a) on what date administrators were appointed by Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. and (b) what the total amount of indebtedness by Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. to Barrow-in-Furness borough council was at the date of the appointment of the administrators; and whether he gave his consent to the appointment of these administrators.

Mr. Portillo: Administrators were appointed on 21 December. We understand from the council that £628,000 was owed to them by the company. The Secretary of State's consent was not required to the appointment of administrators, which was made by the courts following an application by the directors of the company under the Insolvency Act 1986. The Secretary of State was, however, kept informed by the council and made clear that he had no objection to the council's action in connection with the appointment of administrators.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the amounts Barrow-in-Furness borough council transferred to Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. between 6 October 1988 and 10 November 1988; and whether his prior consent was sought for such transfers.

Mr. Portillo: We have no information about any such transfers.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his consent was sought for the National Westminster Bank plc to obtain a legal mortgage over Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. property.

Mr. Portillo: No, and we have no information about any such mortgage. Public transport companies are, however, entitled to borrow from banks by way of temporary loans or overdrafts without the Secretary of State's consent, and may offer property as security for such borrowing.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much revenue to the Exchequer would increase if the fuel duty rebate was abolished.

Mr. Portillo: In 1988-89 some £158 million of fuel duty rebate was paid to local bus operators.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of the abolition of fuel duty rebate on (a) bus fares and (b) bus services in sparsely populated rural areas.

Mr. Portillo: We have estimated in 1988 that, assuming all else stayed the same in the local bus industry, the abolition of fuel duty rebate would result in either an increase in fares of some 13 per cent., supposing the whole effect was on fares, or a decrease in bus miles of some 12 per cent., supposing the whole effect was on bus miles. In practice it is likely that there would be some combination of these two effects. No separate estimate has been made of the effect on bus services in sparsely populated rural areas.

Motorcycle Test

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to introduce the new accompanied motor cycle test; and what will the fee be for the test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We intend to introduce the new accompanied motor cycle riding test, for both motor cycles and mopeds, throughout Great Britain on Monday 2 October 1989. The examiner, instead of conducting the test on foot, will accompany the candidate on another motor cycle (or sometimes in a car) giving directions by radio link. This will make the test more rigorous. It will cover more ground. The examiner will see the entirety of the candidate's performance in the prevailing road and traffic conditions. The change in the test has been generally welcomed.

The test will be available from 212 driving test centres throughout the country.

Because of the extra costs involved in providing an accompanied test (provision of examiners' motor cycles, protective clothing and mobile radio equipment) it is proposed that the current test fee of £16·50 be increased to £24, compared with £18, with effect from 5 June for a car test. We are consulting all interested organisations on the change in regulations to effect this increase.

Taunton Bypass

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for repairing the Taunton bypass section of the M5; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Four major maintenance schemes will be carried out over the next few years to renew completely the southbound carriageway to enable it to carry the traffic expected well into the next century.

The first of these contracts has recently been completed to the north of junction 26.

Every effort will be made to minimise inconvenience to road users during the works, which will be programmed to avoid peak holiday periods.

The decision to do the work following a study of the long-term maintenance needs of this length of M5 which was commissioned by Somerset county council at the Department's request.

Unleaded Petrol

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the availability of unleaded petrol at motorway petrol service areas since the hon. Member's reply from the Minister for Roads and Traffic of 16 February, Official Report, column 294.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment and I are pleased that unleaded petrol is now available at all motorway service areas. The number of unleaded petrol pumps at sites is being increased to meet demand.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will uprate to 1989-90 prices the figures for investment by British Rail in the reply given to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 6 April, Official Report, columns 263-64.

Mr. Portillo: The figures are as follows:

1948	40	603
1949	44	640
1950	43	624

1987-88	526	594
1988-89	596	[2]629

[1] 1984-5 was a 15 month financial period. The figure shown for 1984 is the 12 month internally reported result.
[2] forecast outturn.

The figures include investment in Freightliners, BRML and BREL but exclude the laying of continuous welded track which BR do not now classify as investment.

Indicative figures for BR's plans for future investment (excluding investment in BREL, which is being sold, and in the proposed high speed link to the Channel tunnel) are:

	£ million
1989-90	781
1990-91	865
1992-93	865

In order to show the most consistent picture the figures in the table include some elements of "corporate" as well as "railway" investment. BR's standard definitions of these have changed over the years. The figures have been adjusted to current values by the most recent indices. They show that there was a high level of investment during the modernisation programme of the late 1950s and early 1960s. BR's route mileage now is 45 per cent. less than it was in the peak investment year of 1959, but passenger mileage is currently at broadly the same levels as in 1959.

EC Transport Ministers' Council

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the recent European Council of Transport Ministers meeting in Luxembourg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I successfully negotiated a satisfactory end-date for the United Kingdom derogations from the Community maximum lorry weight limits. Against a Commission proposal that our derogation should end in 1996 I insisted that we needed more time to bring sufficient of our bridges up to suitable strength. It was a major achievement that the 40 tonne gross and 11·5 tonne drive axle weight limits will not apply in the United Kingdom until 1 January 1999.

The Council also agreed to an improved inter-regional air services directive; a regulation to improve the working of air transport computer reservation systems, but with suitable data protection; a directive on road haulage statistics; a Resolution highlighting the need for improved co-operation in air traffic control; and conclusions reaffirming the need to make progress in the Community's transit negotiations with Austria, Switzerland and Yugoslavia. The Commission's proposal on charging infrastructure costs to heavy goods vehicles was referred to Finance ministers. Against the United Kingdom's wishes, but on qualified majority voting, the Council agreed to increase the maximum permitted length of articulated vehicles from 15·5 to 16·5 metres; and to adopt a measure requiring a minimum tyre tread depth of 1·6 millimetres over three quarters of tyres' width.

There was discussion but no agreement on a proposed short-term road haulage cabotage experiment; blood alcohol levels for drivers; the wearing of seat belts; and west Africa shipping.

The Commission presented a proposal on shipping "positive measures" and a revised proposal for Community spending on transport infrastructure. There was some general discussion on the environment and transport under "any other business".

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the Council meeting on heavier lorries on 5 June; and what are the implications for the United Kingdom and roads and bridge expenditure.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We agreed that 40-tonne lorries will not reach British roads until 1999. We succeeded in persuading other member states that an earlier end-date would be premature.

This date will give us the time needed for our bridges to be adequately strengthened. The strengthening programme is already underway. There are no new expenditure implications on trunk roads. We shall be talking further to local authorities to consider any implications for their programme.

The Council also agreed on a work programme for improving lorries so that by the late 1990s they should be fitted with road-friendly suspensions which will be less damaging to roads and bridges, safer, quieter and better for the environment.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends to meet the teaching unions to discuss the introduction of localised pay agreements.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 6 June 1989 at column 14.

CIVIL SERVICE

Interchange with Outside Organisations

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what was the level of interchange between the Civil Service and outside organisations in 1988.

Mr. Luce: My Department's report on the interchange of staff between the Civil Service and other organisations in 1988 shows that the number of long-term secondments —that is, those of at least three months' duration— between the Civil Service and industrial or commercial organisations increased by 7 per cent. in 1988 to 505. There was a slight decrease—of some 3 per cent.—in the number of long-term secondments between the Civil Service and other organisations, of which there were 499 in 1988.

On 1 March 1989, my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I launched the Bridge programme to increase contact between Government and business. I am confident that, building on the substantial level of interchange achieved in recent years, this programme will provide a valuable boost to secondments and lead to even higher numbers of people being seconded between the Civil Service and other organisations.

A copy of the 1988 interchange report has been placed in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Charges

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out his forecast of the effect of current levels of interest charges on inflation.

Mr. Lilley: Current levels of interest rates will, in due course, lead to a reduction in inflation.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the considerations he takes into account in establishing whether the pound is overvalued or undervalued against (a) the deutschmark and (b) other principal currencies.

Mr. Lilley: The considerations the Government take into account in formulating their monetary policy, in which the exchange rate plays a key role, were set out in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget speech on 14 March, at columns 294-309.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the considerations which govern his policy in relation to the level of the pound sterling against other currencies.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget speech on 14 March, at columns 294-309.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now specify the considerations which would make the time appropriate to join the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the speech my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made to the Royal Institute of International Affairs on 25 January.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements have been made to introduce chargeable payroll deductions in the Civil Service and associated non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Brooke: Where appropriate a collection charge of 2½ per cent. of the amount of the deduction is made.

Customs Officers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs officers were in post at the ports of (a) Fishguard, (b) Pembroke Dock and (c) Holyhead as at (i) 5 April 1979 (ii) 5 April 1984 and (iii) 5 April 1989.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The numbers of Customs officers in post at the ports of Fishguard, Pembroke Dock and Holyhead at 5 April in the years 1979, 1984 and 1989 were as follows:

	1979	1984	1989
Fishguard	21	22	21
Pembroke	17	[1]18	[2]20
Holyhead	45	39	67

[1]excludes four mobile staff not solely engaged in port duties.
[2]excludes 14 mobile staff.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs officers were in post in Britain as of (a) 5 April 1979 and (b) 5 April 1989.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 6 June 1989]: On 5 April 1979 there were 7,600 Customs officers in post at ports, airports and inland premises. The figure for 5 April 1989 was 8,000.

Value Added Tax Registrations

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the numbers of new value added tax registrations for businesses with registered addresses in Wales for the calendar years 1987, 1988 and for 1989 to date.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The local VAT offices that cover Wales also cover parts of England along the Welsh border. These offices are at Chester, Cardiff, Swansea, Carmarthen, Shrewsbury and Colwyn Bay.

The numbers of VAT registrations processed by these officers for the years in question were:

Year	New registrations
1987	11,577
1988	14,748
1989—to 31 March	4,061

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Businesses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimates he has of the number of small businesses with a turnover of less than £1 million which went into liquidation in (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I regret that the information requested is not available.

North East Shipbuilders Ltd

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements he envisages for the disposal of the assets at NESL.

Mr. Newton: I made it clear earlier this year, following the announcement that British Shipbuilders was to close NESL, that the remaining work on ferries originally ordered by Danish interests would take some months to complete, and that no action would be taken to break up the assets in the yard before the end of June.

In the intervening period, there have been several expressions of interest in some or all of the yards for a number of purposes including shiprepair, shipbuilding and general engineering.

I have therefore asked British Shipbuilders and its financial advisers carefully to evaluate all such proposals with a view to advising me by the end of this month whether one or more of them provides a basis for detailed negotiation for the disposal of some or all of the assets. As with the evaluation of bids for NESL prior to the announcement of closure particular weight will be given to the security of resulting employment. In judging viability it will be necessary to allow for the fact that subsidy from the intervention fund would not be available.

In making its judgment on the advice offered by British Shipbuilders on any possible disposal, the Government will need also to take appropriate account of its acceptability under the EC sixth directive on shipbuilding of the balance of advantage by comparison with the alternative of acquisition by the Tyne and Wear development corporation for clearance and development; of the extent to which any form of Government financial assistance was envisaged.

Should such a disposal take place, the Government would also have to decide whether measures to assist the creation of employment to replace that in the yards continued to be necessary. Pending a decision, elements of the proposed remedial package not yet implemented, including designation of an enterprise zone, will be held in abeyance.

Companies Investigation Branch

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the establishment and staff in post in each grade of the companies investigation branch of the Department of Trade and Industry in each year since 1984.

Mr. Forth: The following table shows the posts allocated by grade to the companies investigation branch on 1 April in each of the years in question. Staff in post tends to change in the course of a year. The table, therefore also lists the staff in post on 1 April.

Grade	1 April 1984		1 April 1985		1 April 1986		1 April 1987		1 April 1988		1 April 1989

Private Limited Companies

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many private limited companies registered in England and Wales have a paid-up share capital of greater than £100,000;

(2) how many private limited companies registered in England and Wales have paid-up share capital in each of the bands (a) £25,000 to £50,000, (b) £50,000 to £75,000 and (c) £75,000 to £100,000.

Mr. Maude: This information is not currently available for all private limited companies on the companies' register. However, work is in hand to compile data on the lines requested for companies formed since May 1987 and this is expected to be available from Companies house in a few weeks' time.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding the minimum share capital required by private limited companies seeking authorisation under the Financial Services Act 1986 from the Securities and Investments Board or any self-regulatory organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The financial resources requirements for persons authorised by the Securities and Investments Board or by self-regulating organisations recognised under the Financial Services Act are matters for the board and the organisation concerned. As far as I am aware, none of these regulatory bodies expresses its requirements in terms of minimum share capital.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the sum recovered so far from the Barlow Clowes international fund; and how much has been returned to investors.

Mr. Maude: I understand the gross realisations, including bank interest, made by the receivers of funds promoted by Barlow Clowes International Limited amount so far to approximately £20 million.

No distribution has yet been made to BCI investors pending the outcome of three court cases, two of which have already been heard with judgment reserved. The third case, to be heard in late June, will determine the basis upon which each individual investor's entitlement to any distribution will be calculated. I understand that it is hoped that after judgment of the three cases an interim distribution to investors in BCI may be made in the late summer or autumn this year.

Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list regulations made under section 74(7) of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985; and what plans he has to extend such definition.

Mr. Maude: Regulations made under section 74(7) of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 are set out in regulation 11 of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 1925 (s147)). There are no current plans to extend the definition.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider legislation to introduce one period applicable to gratuitous alienation to an associate of the debtor or other parties in terms of section 34(3) of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985.

Mr. Maude: No such legislation is considered necessary at present.

An associate of a person who has subsequently been bankrupt would have been in a better position than any other person to judge the bankrupt's financial circumstances when the alienation took place. To be fair and just, an alienation in favour of an associate should continue to be challengeable if it was effected five years before the date of sequestration of the bankrupt's estate while an alienation in favour of any other person should be challengeable if it was effected two years before the date of sequestration.

Tourism

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total value of tourism in Yorkshire and Humberside at current prices in each of the years from May 1979 to May 1989.

Mr. John Lee: I have been asked to reply.

The available information relates to expenditure by international and domestic visitors staying at least one night in Yorkshire and Humberside in each calendar year from 1979 to 1988. Figures for expenditure by United Kingdom residents on day-trips within Yorkshire and Humberside are not available.

WALES

Agricultural Department

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to restructure his agriculture department in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Agriculture Department staff presently located at Plas Crug are in the process of moving to Trawsgoed. This relocation will produce worthwhile savings in accommodation costs and some staff economies. There will be no redundancies.

Heart and Lung Transplants

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are on the waiting list for (a) heart and (b) lung transplants for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Heart and lung transplants are carried out at supra-regional centres in England and the information requested is not held by the Welsh Office.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to ensure a sufficient supply of wheelchair housing for people with disabilities who wish to leave residential care or to set up home on their own; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It is for local authorities and housing associations in conjunction with Housing for Wales to assess housing need in their area and to make appropriate provision for people with special needs including those with disabilities.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of completions of (a) wheelchair housing and (b) mobility housing by (i) local authorities, (ii) housing associations and (iii) the private sector in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: Returns from local authorities indicate the number of dwellings built for the disabled to be as follows. Reliable estimates as regards the private sector are not available.

East Glamorgan General Hospital

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the major obstacles remaining in the way of an announcement by him of the start-up date for the construction of a replacement for East Glamorgan general hospital.

Mr. Grist: It is for the Mid Glamorgan DHA to indicate when construction of a replacement for this hospital might commence.

Purolite Factory, Talbot Green

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking in response to the messages received by the Welsh Office from people in the Talbot Green area expressing concern about the operation of the Purolite factory in that village.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply sent to him on 6 June by my right hon. Friend.

Higher and Further Education

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the increase in the current year of 3 per cent. in expenditure on institutions of higher and further education in Wales, in the light of the current inflation levels.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The higher education quantum for 1989-90 is based on a figure 8·75 per cent. higher than last year's allocation. Some LEAs may provide further resources for higher education in addition to their share of the quantum to meet local priorities. Recurrent expenditure on further education is supported from the overall provision for local authority current expenditure on education, which rose by 6·3 per cent. between 1988-89 and the current year. Capital expenditure on higher and further education institutions in 1989-90 is expected to exceed last year's figure of £10·7 million by a substantial factor.

Young People (Qualifications)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what he intends to do to overcome the shortage of young people in Wales with the higher education qualifications and training required by industry and the financial services.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The reform of college governing bodies under the Education Reform Act, the priorities adopted by the Wales Advisory Body in formulating its advice on the distribution of the higher education quantum and the establishment of a transbinary Wales access unit to encourage and support the development of access courses will all assist higher education institutions to meet the demands of industry for highly skilled manpower. We have been encouraging employers to prepare for potential labour shortages by retraining existing workers, and drawing on the unemployed and other adults entering or re-entering the labour market. Our own training programmes are designed to facilitate this. We are particularly aware of the needs of the financial services sector in Wales and my right hon. Friend is discussing with interested parties measures to strengthen the skill base. He will be making an announcement on this shortly.

Stone Quarrying (Taff Ely)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards a physical expansion of stone quarrying in and around the borough of Taff Ely.

Mr. Grist: Responsibility for mineral planning in Taff Ely lies with the mineral planning authority, Mid Glamorgan county council.

Litter

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he intends to take to combat the problems of litter on and around the streets of the valleys communities.

Mr. Peter Walker: We are considering placing a duty on local authorities to clean public areas, having regard to codes of practice which the Government would issue. We are also looking at ways of enabling local authorities to enforce the Litter Act more effectively.

Sewage Disposal

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what measures he intends to take to ensure that the Welsh water authority reduces the volume of sewage which it releases into the rivers of south Wales during periods of high rainfall.

Mr. Grist: None. The operation of storm sewage overflows during periods of high rainfall is a necessary practice to prevent the surcharging of sewers and the likely consequent flooding of properties with sewage.

Research and Development (New Industries)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he intends to take to promote the business of research and development in the new industries of south Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department actively promotes a wide range of measures aimed at stimulating industrial research and development. Financial assistance is available for collaborative research and for exploring key technologies. The Link scheme encourages companies to work jointly with universities and polytechnics, while small firms can benefit from the SMART competition and the regional enterprise grants for innovation. WINtech, a division of the WDA, has been established specifically to advance the development and use of new technology in Welsh industry. It provides quality advice on technology transfer and product development, and access to seed capital. Welsh Development International complements this broader effort by working hard to encourage inward investors to establish research and development facilities in Wales.

Welsh Water Authority (Headquarters)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the bill for the current construction of the reinforced concrete monitoring building at the Welsh water authority's area headquarters at Nelson, Mid Glamorgan, will be written off under the Government's write-off of water authority debts.

Mr. Grist: Recent Government statements on debt write-off relate only to water authority borrowings from the national loans fund. The Government will not be seeking to identify notional borrowings against specific projects.

Out-patient Waiting Lists

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the reasons for the differences in the time it takes to clear out-patient waiting lists in Glamorgan general hospital, Cardiff royal infirmary and the average for all hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Grist: As the introduction to Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1989: No. 1 makes clear, for a variety of reasons care is needed in interpreting the data given in the bulletin, thus making meaningful comparisons difficult. In the case of Cardiff royal infirmary the hospital provides a range of specialties which are particularly to it and may be different from those found in other hospitals, notably East Glamorgan hospital. There are further differences between individual specialties, notably in the case of Cardiff royal infirmary trauma and orthopaedics. The East Glamorgan general hospital is understood to have had staffing problems at consultant level which will have affected the notional waiting time figures there, at least in the short term. Detailed information on the explanation for waiting list performance by particular hospitals may be obtained direct from the relevant health authorities, upon which the responsibility to achieve the right balance of services and resources in serving their patients in the light of local circumstances and needs.

Channel Tunnel

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will takes steps to ensure that south Wales rail passengers and freight will enjoy direct access to the continent via the Channel tunnel as soon as any other region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am keen for British Rail to provide Wales with an appropriate level of service to meet identified needs. It is for British Rail to determine the level and nature of such services in the light of available forecasts of traffic.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to the 1989-90 cash limits for class XVII, vote 5 and WO/UA1.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for class XVII, vote 6, I propose to increase the WO/UA1 urban aid non voted cash limit by £7,000,000, from £58,646,000 to £65,646,000. This will permit enhanced land acquisition this year by the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

This increase will be offset by reductions elsewhere within my expenditure programmes and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

These savings are being found from the roads and transport section of class XVII, vote 5. Accordingly, the cash limit for this vote is being reduced by £7,000,000, from £273,711,000 to £266,711,000.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals exist for the multiple launch rocket system to be capable of firing short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals exist for the multiple launch rocket system to be capable of firing short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 20 February 1989, at column 445.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond) of 7 March, Official Report, column 738, what distinction he makes between (i) a warhead and (ii) a system when comparing the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Soviet reductions in nuclear weaponry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A warhead is that part of a missile, projectile, torpedo, rocket or other munition which contains either the nuclear, thermo-nuclear or high explosive device, the chemical or biological agents, or the inert materials intended to inflict damage. A weapon system is the means of delivering the warheads.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear missiles have been removed from the United Kingdom since the United States/Soviet intermediate nuclear forces treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: By the end of 1988, 16 operational missiles had been removed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation general political guidelines for use of nuclear weapons; and how many times they have been followed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The general political guidelines were agreed by Ministers at the Gleneagles NPG meeting in October 1986. The purpose of the document is to provide political guidelines for the employment of nuclear weapons in defence of NATO within the framework of NATO's strategy of flexible response and forward defence. These guidelines are the basis for both peacetime planning by political and military authorities and a guide for carrying out their respective responsibilities in times of tension or conflict. They are consulted regularly.

Nuclear Deterrent

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about the case for modernising the nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters from individuals and organisations.

F111G Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States Air Force F111G aircraft are based in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

NATO (Scotland)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total value to the economy for (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole of the presence of military establishments of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation armed forces in various locations in the region and the country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such estimate has been made for Strathclyde or for Scotland.

Type 23 Frigates

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his programme for ordering Type 23 frigates for 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: Tenders have recently been invited for a batch of up to four type 23s. Decisions will be taken on the precise size and timing of the order after the tenders have been received, evaluated and fully analysed. In the longer term, we have plans to place sufficient orders to maintain a force of about 50 destroyers and frigates.

Procurement Staff

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time in post of each of the grades in the procurement executives of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information about average time in post, by grade, is not compiled in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

CPS (Pay)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what recent discussions he has had on the pay levels within the Crown prosecution service; and what was the outcome of his discussions.

The Attorney-General: Pay for lawyers in the Crown prosecution service at grade 7 and above was settled in July 1988, setting levels until the new review date of 1 August 1989.

It is not my practice to disclose matters relating to any discussions of the nature of those referred to by the hon. Member.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Attorney General, what is the establishment and staff in post in each grade of the Serious Fraud Office in each year of its existence, together with the number of cases referred to it.

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office was established on 6 April 1989. On 31 March 1989, the final day of the financial year 1988-89, the position was as follows:

Grade	Establishment	Staff in post
6	18	13
Senior Executive Officer	5	6
Higher Executive Officer	10	8
Executive Officer	8	7
Administrative Officer	3	1
Administrative Assistant	2	0
Senior Personal Secretary	1	1
Personal Secretary	4	5
Typing Manager	0	1
Typist	6	0
Support Manager 3	1	1
Support Grade 2	3	0

Of those staff in post, one higher executive officer was on loan from the Crown prosecution service. There were in addition to the figures shown 29 agency staff employed on a temporary basis.

The position to 1 June 1989 in the financial year 1989-90 was follows:

Grade	Complement	Staff in Post
5	10	10
6	18	13
Senior Executive Officer	6	6
Higher Executive Officer	11	8
Executive Officer	9	8
Administrative Officer	3	2
Administrative Assistant	2	0
Senior Personal Secretary	1	1
Personal Secretary	6	5
Typing Manager	1	1
Typist	12	0
Support Manager 3	1	1
Total	92	64

Of those staff in post, one higher executive officer was still on loan from the Crown prosecution service. Three of the four grade 5 accountants currently in post are seconded from private practice. There are in addition 29 agency staff employed on a temporary basis.

In the period 6 April 1988, when the Serious Fraud Office was established, to 31 December 1988, 109 separate cases were referred to it for consideration. This number includes some matters which have previously been dealt with by the Crown prosecution service. From 1 January 1989 to date 28 separate cases have been referred.

ENERGY

Pacific Sandpiper

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 11 May, column 481, on the Pacific Sandpiper, a consignment of spent irradiated nuclear fuel was transported into and out of the United Kingdom without it being reprocessed; and on how many occassions such a stop-off has taken place since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The irradiated fuel was from an overseas research reactor and was being returned to its country of origin. The material was subject to international safeguards. It came to the United Kingdom as part of a cargo of irradiated fuel the balance of which was for reprocessing at Sellafield. Since May 1979 there has been an average of about one such shipment a year.

World Association of Nuclear Operators

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what departmental representation was made at the launch of the World Association of Nuclear Operators in Moscow on 15 May.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. The World Association of Nuclear Operators comprises representatives of every organisation that operates electrical power producing nuclear reactors. It is independent of Government. However, I welcome its establishment and support its aims.

Pressurised Water Reactor, Wylfa

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has considered the terms of reference for the public inquiry into the proposed pressurised water reactor at Wylfa in Anglesey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend received an application from the CEGB on 18 April 1989 for his consent to construct a PWR nuclear power station to be known as Wylfa B. He directed the board to advertise its application and allowed a period of up to 31 July 1989 for objections to be made to him.

Until the response to the advertisements is known and the views of the relevant local planning authorities are received, it is too early to speculate whether a public inquiry will be necessary or, if a public inquiry is held, what matters my right hon. Friend will ask the inquiry inspector to consider.

Berkeley Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give a timetable for the decommissioning of Berkeley nuclear power station over the next 14 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the Central Electricity Generating Board has any plans to reschedule the natural circulation test at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station that was cancelled due to public concern; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from the Central Electricity Generating Board that it has no immediate plans to carry out a natural circulation test at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station. However, if the board should decide to undertake such a test it will publicise its plans in advance. No test can go ahead unless the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is satisfied that it is safe.

Miners' Pension Scheme

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to introduce the amending order with regard to the retired mineworkers pension scheme benefits lost by former mineworkers due to changes in the availability for work procedures.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The draft Redundant Mineworkers and Concessionary Coal (Payments Schemes) order 1989 will be introduced shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Birkenhead Jobcentre

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if Birkenhead jobcentre has sufficient staff to answer claimants' inquiries about possible job opportunities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Birkenhead jobcentre has sufficient staff to deal with the range of functions and activities offered by an office of its size. There have been no reports of queues or delays from either staff or members of the public.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date he plans to publish his Department's internal review of employment services for disabled people commissioned in March 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 8 November 1988, at column 54.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations his Department has had with disability organisations and disabled people on the review of employment services for disabled people.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 7 November 1988, at columns 54-55.

Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to implement section 131 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

Mr. Cope: My Department has published a consultation paper today seeking views on the desirability of extending the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals to cases involving breach of employment contract in certain circumstances. The consultation paper, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses, has been sent to a number of interested organisations. The deadline for receipt of comments is 4 August.

PRIME MINISTER

Gross Domestic Product (Defence)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a table showing the information she has on the percentage of gross domestic product spent on defence in (a) Russia and (b) North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries, together with figures showing (i) gross domestic product and (ii) gross domestic product per head in dollar terms.

The Prime Minister: The table sets out the information requested for NATO countries for 1987, the latest year for which complete figures are available. Provisional figures for 1988 defence expenditure as a percentage of GDP in each NATO country were included in the 1989 Statement on the Defence Estimates, Cm. 675-I, page 39. The Soviet Union has recently stated that its defence expenditure for 1989 will be 77·3 billion roubles. We do not know how this figure has been compiled and assess that, when compiled according to the definitions common to NATO countries, outlays should be roughly twice this level. As such, they would constitute an estimated 15 to 17 per cent. of Soviet GDP. No accurate estimates can be given of Soviet GDP or GDP per capita in dollar terms; conversion of rouble data into dollars using commercial exchange rates is likely to prove highly misleading.

Russia—Nato (Military Advantage)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a table showing the Government's assessment of the change in the balance of military advantage between Russia and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries in 1959, 1968, 1978 and 1988 respectively.

The Prime Minister: Information on the balance between NATO and the Warsaw pact forces for 1978 and 1988 is available in the relevant tables in the Statements on Defence Estimates for those years, Cmnd. 7099 and Cm. 344–I. Similar information for 1959 and 1968 is not available.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister in what ways the costs of self-governing hospitals can be expected to be reduced.

The Prime Minister: Self-governing hospitals are not being established as a cost saving exercise. They will help to improve the choice and quality of the services offered to the public and the efficiency with which these services are delivered.

Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Troops)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what assumptions about the proportion of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance nations' troops which would be supplied to take part in an invasion of Europe underlie Her Majesty's Government's defence policy.

The Prime Minister: The Council for Mutual Economic Assistance is not a military organisation. Details of the forces available to the Warsaw pact are set out in chapter six of the Statement of the Defence Estimates 1989, Cm. 675–I.

Patient Care (GPs' Budgets)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what will be the effects on patient care of the Government's proposal that overspending by a group of general practitioners in one year will result in a reduction in their budget in the following year.

The Prime Minister: None. If a practice budget becomes overspent, it will be open to the budget holders to seek a budgetary review. Should the review find that a higher level of spending was justified by virtue of changed circumstances since the initial budget was set, there will be no compensatory reduction in the following year. In any event, practice budgets will always be set at levels which safeguard the interests of patients and no changes will be made to budgets which would jeopardise this fundamental principle.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether any nuclear weapons sited in Britain may be used for defensive purposes without the consent of Her Majesty's Government;

(2) whether nuclear weapons sited in West Germany can be used for defensive purposes without the consent of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany.

The Prime Minister: At the North Atlantic Council meeting at Athens in 1962, both the United Kingdom and the United States specifically committed themselves to consult their allies, time and circumstances permitting, before releasing their nuclear weapons for use. The Council also adopted guidelines on the degree to which political consultation on such use might be possible. Subsequently the nuclear planning group, meeting in The Hague in 1968, agreed that special weight should be given to the views of the NATO countries most directly affected. It would not be in the public interest to reveal the precise details of the arrangements.

The separate arrangements for joint decision over the use of United States bases in the United Kingdom were set out in the reply of my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 24 February 1987, at column 222.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister whether she is prepared to use nuclear weapons first.

The Prime Minister: The possibility of first use of nuclear weapons in response to a conventional attack is central to NATO's strategy of deterrence to which I fully subscribe.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what are Her Majesty's Government's policies on the use of available nuclear weapons in the event of a Soviet breakthrough to the Channel ports using conventional weapons.

The Prime Minister: It would undermine our strategy of deterrence to spell out in advance the precise way in which nuclear weapons would or might be used in any given circumstance.

European Community (Benefits)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what benefits have been brought to Nottingham and Nottinghamshire arising (a) from membership of the European Community (b) the consequences of the Single European Act.

The Prime Minister: Membership of the EC has contributed, with the policies of the present Government, to faster growth and greater prosperity in which Nottinghamshire has shared, and which has reduced unemployment in the Nottingham travel-to-work area from 12·8 per cent. to 8·3 per cent. in the two years to April 1989—a reduction of 35 per cent.

The Single European Act will facilitate the creation of the single European market which will enhance these opportunities still further, particularly in view of the United Kingdom's proven attraction as a location for inward investment projects such as Toyota's, which will create new business and employment opportunities throughout the east midlands.

Nottinghamshire is likely to benefit substantially from the EC's recent decision to make new areas of the county, including Mansfield and Worksop, eligible for help from the European regional development fund.

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will establish a further inquiry into events at the Kincora boys' home following the publication of the book "Who Framed Colin Wallace?" by Paul Foot which gives evidence of doubt concerning the validity of information supplied to the Hughes inquiry by the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

The Prime Minister: No. The matter has been fully and carefully investigated by successive inquiries. Any new evidence should be presented to the appropriate authorities.

"Forward Area" (Definition)

Ms. Rudduck: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) of 11 April, Official Report, column 738, what precise area is covered by the term "forward area".

The Prime Minister: The area referred to in my reply covers territory of the German Democratic Republic, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will bring forward proposals to amend section 2 of the European Communities Act 1972 to enable Parliament to decide the level of taxation.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to amend section 2 of the European Communities Act 1972.

EEC (Harmonisation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy that Her Majesty's Government will not agree to any form of harmonisation within the European Economic Community of monetary, fiscal or exchange rate policy under the treaty of Rome or the Single European Act.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the exchange between myself and my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) on 18 May at column 1474 and to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 2 May at columns 13-14.

Monetary Union and Fiscal Harmonisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment has been made of the disadvantages for the United Kingdom, France, West Germany, Benelux and Spain agreeing to monetary union and fiscal harmonisation.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the speech I made to the College of Europe at Bruges, Belgium on 20 September last year and to the speech my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made to the Royal Institute of International Affairs on 25 January.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's estimate of the number of jobs which will be lost in United Kingdom manufacturing as a result of the completion of the internal market.

The Prime Minister: Completion of the single market should result in job gains over a number of years: whether or not these potential gains are achieved will depend on how employers and employees respond to the opportunities that the single market will present.

European Community (Integration)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will commission a survey of public opinion to measure the proportion of voters which want the United Kingdom to be more integrated into the European Community.

The Prime Minister: No.

Germany (Reunification)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will promote the reunification of Germany and a political settlement between Germany and the East European states on terms acceptable to the Federal Republic of Germany.

The Prime Minister: I remind the hon. Gentleman of article 7 of the convention on relations in the Bonn-Paris conventions of 1955:

> "Pending the Peace Settlement the signatory states will co-operate to achieve, by peaceful means, the common aim of a reunified Germany enjoying a liberal-democratic constitution, like that of the Federal Republic."

This long-standing commitment enjoys our continuing support.

EEC (Social Policy)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report a table showing which of the proposals put forward by the European Economic Commission in the social field could not be enacted by the British Parliament on its own account.

The Prime Minister: Parliament can enact legislation in all of the areas proposed in the social field. However, in framing any legislation, the Government will of course have regard to our international obligations, including our obligations under Community law.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to ensure a sufficient supply of wheelchair housing for people with disabilities who wish to leave residential care or to set up home on their own; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment (NI) funds the provision of special needs housing in response to proposals by the Housing Executive and by registered housing associations. It is a matter for the Housing Executive and individual associations in consultation with statutory bodies and voluntary agencies to determine the numbers and locations of units to be provided to wheelchair standard. In practice the supply of wheelchair accommodation has, I believe, kept broadly in line with the needs of physically handicapped people who wish to leave residential care or to set up home on their own.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of completions of (a) wheelchair housing and (b) mobility housing by (i) local authorities, (ii) housing associations and (iii) the private sector in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: I. I am advised by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. However during the period 1976 to 1 April 1989 102 dwellings were built for use by tenants confined to a wheelchair and 6,044 dwellings were built to mobility standard.

ii. The number of wheelchair units completed by registered housing associations in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 financial years is as follows:

Year	Number of units completed
1979-80	10
1980-81	11
1981-82	11
1982-83	15
1983-84	53
1984-85	49
1985-86	39
1986-87	10
1987-88	41
1988-89	79
Total	298

No separate record is kept of units built by registered housing associations to mobility standard. However, most sheltered housing for the elderly is built to mobility standard and the number of such units completed in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Number of units completed
1979-80	181
1980-81	285
1981-82	97
1982-83	448
1983-84	356
1984-85	448
1985-86	497
1986-87	227
1987-88	364
1988-89	421

iii. Further units to mobility standard were provided for client groups other than the elderly but specific numbers are not readily available.

There are no statistics available for the provision of facilities for the wheelchair disabled within the private housing sector.

Short Bros. plc.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he is making towards the privatisation of Short Bros. plc.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made this afternoon, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Sir William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would a (a) single person on half average earnings, (b) single person on average earnings and (c) typical ward sister pay in capital value rates and local income tax combined, assuming an 80/20 capital rate to local income tax split if he or she lived in a property in Lambeth worth (i) £65,000, (ii) £75,000, (iii) £85,000, (iv) £100,000 and (v) £150,000.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is provided in the table.

Illustrative annual liability in Lambeth under a system of capital value rates combined with local income tax, 1988-89

Property value	(a) single person[1] earning £6,360	(b) single person[2] earning £12,725	(c) typical[3] ward sister
£	£	£	£
65,000	1,220	1,400	1,415
75,000	1,395	1,570	1,585
85,000	1,656	1,745	1,755
100,000	1,825	2,000	2,015
150,000	2,685	2,860	2,875

Notes:
[1] Assuming taxable income of £3,755 per year.
[2] Assuming taxable income of £10,120 per year.
[3] Assuming taxable income of £10,595 per year.

The figures are based on the illustrative tax rates placed in the Library on 23 June 1988 and are for 1988-89. No allowance has been made for rebates for those on low income. They assume that the person lives alone, in each case.

Departmental Policy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the failures of implementation of policy and (b) the successes in the implementation of policy by his Department since May 1979.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 25 May (Official Report columns 695-719). Columns 706-08 list the major achievements for which my Department is responsible. There have been no failures.

Community Charge

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the circumstances in which a carer, as a consequence of their caring, may become subject to paying more than one poll tax; and if he will take steps to introduce legislation to remove all such circumstances.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. By the act of caring no one becomes responsible for anyone else's community charge.

Development Grant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total budget for the Yorkshire and Humberside region in grant-in-aid for development for the years May 1979 to May 1989; how much central Government gave towards the budget; and how much was obtained from other sources.

Mr. Trippier: Comprehensive figures for Yorkshire and Humberside are not available, but as a measure of the contribution made by Government the three main Departments concerned with encouraging development —Environment, Employment and Trade and Industry— contributed £489 million in 1988-89 alone.

Housing Grants

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on the timing of announcements as to who will receive grants under (a) section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 and (b) section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 in relation to the beginning of the relevant financial year; and how many times this target has been achieved in the last five years, for each grant.

Mr. Trippier: It is the Department's policy now to announce the award of grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 and under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 where possible before the start of the financial year to which they apply. Applications may be considered (and grants awarded) at any time during the year.

Section 73 grants

Over the last five years, awards of grants were notified in each July or August with the exception of 1987-88 when grants were not announced until September.

Section 16 grants

This grant regime started in May 1987. Awards for the latter half of that year were made in October 1987. For 1988-89 and 1989-90, all recipients of grant were notified before or at the start of the financial year.

Housing (Grants)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the grants which are made by his Department under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 and under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 are normally made on an annual basis; and for what periods grants have been made under those powers for the current financial year.

Mr. Trippier: The grants made by my Department under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 and under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 are normally made on an annual basis. This year has been no exception for grants made under section 16. Section 73 grants have been offered for six months pending the outcome of the review of the section 73 grant regime.

Community Charge

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 16 May, Official Report, column 183, what was the exact amount of the city of Nottingham expenditure on the setting up costs of the community charge which has been supported through the rate support grant.

Mr Gummer: The grant-related expenditure assessment for Nottingham for 1989-90 included £307,000 in respect of community charge preparation costs. This is the level of expenditure which is supported through rate support grant. As I explained in my answer to the hon. Member on 16 May, there will in addition be a specific grant of £306,864 made available to Nottingham in 1989-90 for these purposes.

Housing (Kirklees)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new dwellings have been built in the area covered by Kirklees council in total since 1979 and in each of the last five years for which figures are available by (a) private builders, (b) Kirklees council and (c) housing associations.

Mr. Trippier: The reported housebuilding completions in 1979 and 1988 for the borough of Kirklees are published in issues 59 and 89, respectively, of "Local Housing Statistics". Annual figures for intervening years appear in "Housebuilding in England by local authority areas: 1980 to 1987."

Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants of Kirklees council have exercised their right to buy their council house or flat in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the "Statistics on Right to Buy and Other Council House Sales" tables which have been placed in the Library giving available information up to December 1988. The tables show year by year information since 1979-80 together with cumulative figures since April 1979. No returns of sales to sitting tenants have been received by the Department from Kirklees district council since December 1986.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure for the number of council houses in the Kirklees council area which are empty.

Mr. Trippier: The information was provided by Kirklees metropolitan district council in its April 1988 housing investment programme return (HIP 1), a copy of which is in the Library.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of dwellings in the United Kingdom in 1979; and what is the equivalent figure today.

Mr. Trippier: It is estimated that there were 21·3 million dwellings in the United Kingdom at the end of December 1979 and 23·0 million at the end of December 1988.

Housing Needs (National Forum)

Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he is giving to the report of the national forum on housing needs in the nineties; and when he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has received no such report. If he does, no doubt he will consider it carefully.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the proposed lower thresholds for a renovation grant contained in the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources", for (a) a single disabled person with a disability premium, (b) a single disabled person with a severe disability premium, (c) a married couple, one of whom is in receipt of the disability premium, and (d) a married couple with two children one of whom is in receipt of the disability premium.

Mr. Trippier: The consultation paper proposes that the lower income threshold for the new renovation grants should be related to each household's circumstances. It would be calculated using weekly allowances and premiums broadly similar to those used in the calculation of housing and community charge benefits, with the addition of a £20 per week "renovation grant premium". Using the allowances and premiums currently in force under the housing benefit regulations, the lower income thresholds would be as follows:

(a) Single disabled person: £68·60 (£3,567 pa)
(b) Single severely disabled person: £94·80 (£4,930 pa)
(c) Married couple, one disabled: £94·30 (£4,904 pa)
(d) Married couple, two children, one disabled: £122·50 (£6,370 pa)

In each case the applicant is assumed to be between 25 and 59 years old and any children are 11 to 15. Where the applicant is younger a different personal allowance would apply, and there will be a scale of allowances for children of different age groups. There will also be different premiums for people aged 60 or over. The lower threshold will therefore depend upon the precise composition of the household.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the proposed upper income thresholds for a grant for eligible works contained in the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources, amounting to (a) £5,000, (b) £10,000, (c) £15,000 and (d) £20,000 in each of the following cases (a) a single disabled person with a severe disability premium, (b) a single disabled person with a severe disability premium, (c) a married couple, one of whom is in receipt of the disability premium and (d) a married couple with two children one of whom is in receipt of the disability premium.

Mr. Trippier: The upper income threshold for renovation grant eligibility depends upon the cost of eligible works and the composition of the applicant's household. Net income would be assessed according to rules broadly the same as those applicable to housing and community charge benefit and be subject to similar disregards. Using the rules currently in force for housing benefit, the upper income threshold for renovation grant eligibility in each of the cases cited would be as follows:

case	Upper net income threshold for renovation grant eligibility—£pw (£pa) by cost of eligible works
	£	£	£	£
Works costing	5,000	10,000	15,000	20,000
(a) Single, disabled	170·48 (8,865)	257·35 (13,382)	344·23 (17,900)	431·10 (22,417)
(b) Single, severely disabled	196·68 (10,227)	283·55 (14,745)	370·43 (19,262)	457·30 (23,780)
(c) Married couple, one disabled	196·18 (10,201)	283·05 (14,719)	369·93 (19,236)	456·80 (23,754)
(d) Married couple, two children, one disabled	219·38 (11,408)	306·25 (15,925)	393·13 (20,443)	480·00 (24,960)

These figures assume that the applicant is earning, and take into account the appropriate earnings disregards (£15 per week in cases (a) to (c), £10 per week in case (d). In each case it is assumed that the claimant is between 25 and 59 years old, any children are aged 11 to 15, and that capital after any appropriate disregard is £5,000 or less.

Disability Premium

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum proposed level of grant contained in the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: proposed test of resources" in each of the following cases (a) a single disabled person with a disability premium, (b) a single disabled person with a severe disability premium, (c) a married couple, one of whom is in receipt of the disability premium, and (d) a married couple with two children one of whom is in receipt of the disability premium for a person with savings of (i) nil, (ii) £3,000, (iii) £5,000, (iv) £8,000 and (v) £10,000.

Mr. Trippier: The amount of grant will depend upon the cost of eligible works, the composition of the applicant's household and the financial resources of the applicant. There is no grant maximum.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to seek powers to rectify the position where local authorities have sought information on poll tax registration forms in excess of his recommendation; and if he will seek powers to determine what information local authorities are able to seek in future years;

(2) what guidance he issued to local authorities about the information they should seek on the poll tax registration form; which information he has concerning local authorities which have asked for information in excess of his recommendation; what communications he has had with those authorities; and what advice he has given to them concerning rectification.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

It is for community charges registration officers to ensure that any request for information made for the purpose of compiling registers falls within their statutory powers. Guidance on these matters is contained in Community Charge Practice Note No. 8 pubished in November 1988. Copies of all practice notes are in the Library.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the progress in the establishment of local arrangements to cover payment by student nurses of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 26 May 1989]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Most student nurses training under the existing arrangements are salaried and will pay the full personal community charge reduced by any community charge benefit to which they may be entitled. Nursing students training under the proposed Project 2000 scheme will pay only 20 per cent. of the personal community charge like other full time students.

Home Improvement (Document)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the disability organisations which responded to the consultation document entitled "Home Improvement Policy: Proposed Test of Resources".

Mr. Trippier: The following disability organisations responded to the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources":

Association of Disabled Professionals;
Derbyshire Centre for Integrated Living;
Disabled Living Foundation;
Disablement Information Centre and Advice Line, Wakefield;
Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR);
Royal Society for Mentally Handicapped Children and Adults (MENCAP)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in light of responses from disability organisations to the consultation document entitled "Home Improvement Policy: Proposed Test of Resources", he plans to review his decision to impose a test of resources on disabled facilities grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The proposed test of resources is intended to ensure that those least able to afford the costs of adaptations receive the grants that they need. We do not propose to abandon the principle of the test, but we are not committed to the precise details proposed in the consultation paper. We shall announce our decisions in due course.

Rural Development (Leicestershire)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any of the expenditure for 1989-90 by the Rural Development Commission will be for rural development programmes in the county of Leicester.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no rural development programme as such in Leicestershire. The Rural Development Commission makes grants under other headings in the county, as well as providing advice and loans to small rural businesses.

Steel-framed Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet a delegation in July from the National Steel-Framed Home Owners Association and their local members to discuss the problems of steel-framed homes.

Mr. Trippier: No.

BISF Estate, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what grounds the Nottingham city council's estate action application for the BISF estate in Nottingham was rejected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Nottingham city's application for Estate Action resources for the BISF houses was turned down because the scheme did not meet the main Estate Action criterion which is to promote innovation in the way local authorities manage and refurbish their estates.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what offers of estates action assistance were made to the deputation on Nottingham BISF properties.

Mr. Trippier: Nottingham city council was invited to make an application for funding improvements to the Bilborough estate which would meet the Department's Estate Action criteria.

Council Tenants (House Purchase)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each local authority which has applied to his Department under the Housing Act 1988, section 129, for approval for a scheme providing cash incentives for their existing tenants to purchase homes elsewhere; and if he will list for each such scheme submitted to his Department for approval (a) the total amount of cash which would be made available per annum for the scheme, (b) the total number of households which would be eligible each year for assistance, (c) the minimum level of assistance which the scheme would provide per household, (d) the maximum level of assistance which the scheme would provide per household, (e) the criteria which would be used to select which households would be assisted and (f) the criteria which would be used to select which properties they would be assisted to buy.

Mr. Trippier: The table sets out the local authorities which have sought approval for schemes in 1989-90, the maximum expenditure to be incurred, and the grants to be made available to households. Most of the schemes are limited to tenants of family houses, and in some cases the grant to be paid varies according to the size of the property vacated; it will be for each authority to determine which tenants to assist if the number of eligible applicants exceeds the funds available. The choice of a new home is left to the recipient of the grant, subject to a price limit.

Rent Officers (Guidance)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's guidance to rent officers in carrying out their new role under the Housing Act 1988, Part V, as from 1 April 1989.

Mr. Trippier: The detailed basis on which rent officers assess the rent paid by, and accommodation occupied by, private tenants claiming housing benefit is set out in the Rent Officers (Additional Functions) Order 1989. Advice on how rent officers might approach their new task—particularly in circumstances where no direct market evidence is available—was included in a study of the private rented housing market commissioned by the Department from the consultants Price Waterhouse. Copies of that report were circulated to rent officers and were placed in the Library in February.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's plans to monitor the impact of the Housing Act 1988, Part I, on (a) the number of homeless households accepted by local authorities in England and (b) the ability of local authorities in England to secure housing for homeless households.

Mr. Trippier: Part I of the Housing Act 1988 should improve the supply of rented accommodation and therefore reduce homelessness. Research into its effects will be carried out in due course, as part of the Department's research programme.

Housing Revenue Accounts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the level of central Government housing subsidy, and (b) the level of discretionary rate fund contributions to local authority housing revenue accounts (a) in inner London, (b) in outer London, (c) in the south-east outside London, (d) in metropolitan areas outside London, (e) in non-metropolitan areas outside the south-east, and (f) in England as a whole in each year from 1981-82 to 1987-88; and if he will give this information at constant 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is shown in the table. The rate fund contribution figures (RFCs) are net amounts (the balance between contributions to housing revenue accounts and transfers the other way to general rate funds). For completeness, the information for the GLC/LRB is shown also. The main housing subsidy figures will differ from those published previously because they include subsequent adjustments to the original claims received by the Department and are expressed at 1987-88 prices.

Notes:

1. The LRB ceased to operate a Housing Revenue Account after 1985-86.
2. The main housing subsidy figures are entitlements for each financial year and not payments made in that year.
3. The rate fund contributions may not be the final figure for each year but are based on informa tion received by the Department in connection with housing subsidy claims.

Disabled People (Water Bill)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision he is proposing to include in the Water Bill to protect disabled people on dialysis machines from disconnection.

Mr. Howard: Water undertakers already take special precautions to ensure continuity of supplies to customers who use dialysis machines. Further safeguards against disconnection of domestic customers will be included in the conditions of appointment of the new water undertakers. Disconnection will not normally be allowed without prior application to the county court for debt recovery, nor where the local social security or social services office has requested a delay to examine the customer's circumstances. No Bill amendment is needed.

Rural Development

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used in reaching decisions on rural development programmes in (a) the county of Leicester and (b) Northamptonshire.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Rural development programmes are drawn up for the rural development areas designated in 1984 by the rural development commission. The criteria which the Department laid down for the selection of such areas were:

- (a) above average unemployment;
- (b) an inadequate or unsatisfactory range of employment opportunities;
- (c) adverse effects from population decline or sparsity of population;
- (d) net outward migration of population;
- (e) disproportionate number of elderly people;
- (f) poor access to services and facilities.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure a sufficient supply of wheelchair housing for people with disabilities who wish to leave residential care or to set up home on their own; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: It is for housing authorities to analyse needs locally and to bid for resources through the housing investment programme system to enable provision to be made—in collaboration with voluntary and private agencies.

My Department will be sponsoring a research project this year to assess what proportion of disabled and elderly people need special accommodation and to examine the most cost-effective methods of provision.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of completions of (a) wheelchair housing and (b) mobility housing by (i) local authorities, (ii) housing associations and (iii) the private sector in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: Numbers of new completions of wheelchair and mobility dwellings for local authorities and new towns and for housing associations in 1988 appear in table 1.6(b) of "Housing and Construction Statistics", part 1 No. 36; figures for earlier years appear in table 6.7(b) of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1977-87"; copies of both publications are in the Library. No reliable estimates of private sector completions are available.

Bottle Re-use Schemes

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has commissioned any studies on the operation of bottle re-use schemes, with standard specification bottles, in other countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The former Waste Management Advisory Council published a study in 1981 of returnable and non-returnable containers, based on a review of overseas practice. The Government believe that the council's recommendations against mandatory re-use schemes are still valid.

Discharge Consents (South West Water)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what ministerial permission has (a) been requested and (b) been granted for relaxation of STW discharge consents for South West Water; and what period of time they are to cover.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 6 June 1989]: On 7 December (Official Report, column 199) I announced a capital programme costing around £1 billion to bring sewage treatment works into compliance with their discharge consents by March 1992. Water authorities may apply for time limited consents for those works to regularise current performance and maintain the current river water quality while improvements take place.

Eighty three applications for such consents have been received from South West Water. A list of those sewage works for which these applications have been made has been placed in the Library of the House. None has yet been granted. The capital works will generally be completed by March 1992. The time limited consents for any individual works will cover the period up until commissioning of the upgraded works. Thereafter consent conditions no less stringent than those which currently apply will be imposed.

EC Habitats Directive

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made on discussions about the EEC habitats directive; and when he expects an agreement to be reached.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Discussions on the proposal for an EC directive on habitat protection have continued at three working group meetings called by the Spanish Presidency. A technical and scientific working group has been set up to prepare four of the annexes omitted from the Commission's draft. Many of the points which led member states unanimously to reject the Commission's proposals at the Environment Council on 24 November 1988 remain to be resolved.

Grants

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what system his Department operates to ensure that recipients of grant aid under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986, and section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 are accountable to his Department for expenditure and performance; and whether that system takes into account such factors as the size of the grant made by the Department, and the administrative capacity of small organisations in receipt of such grants.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 26 May 1989]: The formal conditions of grant for organisations contain the expenditure and performance targets and rules designed to secure the necessary accountability for the proper and effective use of funds. Any organisation unable to meet these vital terms would not receive grant aid. Monitoring by my Department is through audited claims and accounts, general and specific reports and through visits and meetings with the organisations concerned.

Land Register (Statistics)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites are currently on the land register; and what is the total acreage owned by local authorities.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 6 June 1989]: There were 7,900 sites on the land register at 31 May 1989. The total acreage owned by local authorities is 49,900.

Barrow Borough Transport Ltd.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exercise his powers under section 22(2) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to require the Audit Commission to order an extraordinary audit into loans made by the Barrow-in-Furness borough council to Barrow Borough Transport Ltd.

Mr. Gummer: These are matters which the auditor would normally examine in the course of the audit and on which he could take such action as he thought necessary.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain a copy of the report by the chief executive of Barrow-in-Furness borough council dated 20 April and entitled "Inquiry into the Formation of Barrow Borough Transport Ltd. and the Borough Council's Investment in the Company".

Mr. Gummer: This is a matter for the local authority and its auditor.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

53. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Scotland are in receipt of housing benefit in the private and public sectors, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimated number of recipients in 1988-89 in Scotland is:

	Persons
Rent rebate (public sector)	490,000
Rent allowance (private sector)	75,000

Disabled Persons (Partial Incapacity Benefit)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in light of the Social Security Advisory Committee's report entitled, "Benefits for Disabled People: a Strategy for Change," he is examining ways in which a partial incapacity benefit for disabled people could be introduced.

Mr. Scott: I have noted the views of the Social Security advisory committee. We shall look at the need for a partial incapacity benefit when we examine existing benefit provision against the findings of the OPCS surveys.

Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his latest estimate of the costs of implementing section 7 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986;

(2) when he plans to conclude discussions with local authority associations on the implementation of section 7 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986;

(3) when he plans to implement section 7 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: We cannot at present indicate when we will implement section 7 as we are still in discussion about the costs, which the local authority associations estimate at more than £100 million a year. We hope to reach firm conclusions later in the year.

Fraud

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the number of prosecutions and convictions for social security frauds in Scotland in each of the past ten years, giving the sums of money and the number of people involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of people prosecuted at the instigation of the Department and convicted for social security frauds in Scotland are detailed in the table. Information relating to the sums of money involved is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Statistics prior to 1984-85 are not available.

	Total	Benefit fraud	Instrument of payment fraud
Prosecutions
1984-85	463	306	157
1985-86	541	327	214

1988-89	950	550	400

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money he estimates has been lost in each year since 1979 as a result of fraudulent social security claims and how many persons have been successfully prosecuted in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Strathclyde and (d) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1989, columns 857-58]: I regret an inaccuracy has been discovered and the corrected information is as follows:

The numbers of successful prosecutions instigated by the Department in respect of fraudulent social security claims is as follows:

	Great Britain[1]	Scotland[2]	Strathclyde[2]	Greenock and Port Glasgow[2]
1979-80	16,236	—	—	—
1980-81	18,369	—	—	—
1981-82	13,856	—	—	—
1982-83	11,312	—	—	—
1983-84	5,987	—	—	—
1984-85	6,550	301	—	—
1985-86	6,586	320	176	3
1986-87	6,203	569	147	9
1987-88	6,931	424	181	3

[1] Includes both fraudulent benefit claims and fraudulent instrument of payment encashment. Separation of figures not available.

[2] Relates only to fraudulent benefit claims. Earlier information is not available.

SCOTLAND

Local Authority Tenants

14. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses and flats are owned by local authorities in Scotland; and what proposals he has to give to their tenants the opportunities to become owner occupiers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Returns by local authorities indicate that, at 30 September 1988, local authorities in Scotland owned some 808,000 houses and flats.

In the light of the continuing success of the Government's right-to-buy policy, we have no plans at present to change the current statutory arrangements.

Bus Services

15. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans for the privatisation of bus services in Lanarkshire.

25. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans for the privatisation of buses within Lanarkshire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Legislation to provide powers for the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group, including its operations in Lanarkshire, is currently before Parliament. The Government welcome the interest shown by management and employees of the Scottish Bus Group in Lanarkshire in the opportunities provided by privatisation. The Government are encouraging local authorities to dispose of their bus undertakings and welcome Strathclyde regional council's plans to privatise its undertaking including its operations in Lanarkshire.

European Community

16. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what direct input Scottish Office Ministers and officials have on the European Commission and the Council of Ministers.

33. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what direct input Scottish Office Ministers and officials have on the European Commission and the Council of Ministers.

39. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what direct input Scottish Office Ministers and officials have on the European Commission and the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what direct input Scottish Office ministers and officials have on the European Commission and the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office is represented at meetings of the Agriculture and Fisheries Councils by Ministers and/or senior officials. There are also frequent meetings between the Scottish Office and the EC Commission on a wide range of policy issues.

20. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations he has given to the future representation of Scottish interests within the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Ministers and officials will continue to represent Scottish interests through attendance at Agriculture and Fisheries Councils. Officials will also continue to ensure that particular Scottish interests in other Councils are identified and taken into account in the most appropriate way.

41. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the proportion of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation relating to Scotland in the last 12 months which originally emanated from institutions of the European Community.

Mr. Rifkind: The only item of primary legislation concerns the adoption of the EC directive requiring member states to recognise professional qualifications obtained elsewhere in the Community, as it applies to teachers. This is included in the provisions of the Self-Governing Schools Etc. (Scotland) Bill. So far as secondary legislation is concerned, my Departments have implemented 16 regulations or statutory instruments ranging over agriculture and fisheries, environmental protection, planning and health.

National Health Service

17. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from general practitioners about the proposed changes in the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: About 1,650 letters from GPs and members of the public have been received about the White Paper on the Health Service "Working for Patients", and/or the new contract for general practitioners. Agreement on all the major outstanding contract issues was reached with the profession's negotiators on 4 May.

22. Mr. Alan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in implementing policies of competitive budgeting in the National Health Service in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since the last general election savings from competitive tendering have increased from £600,000 to £25 million on 74 contracts. This represents substantial additional resources for patient care in Scotland's health service over the next three to four years. Boards will continue to make progress in both the scope and range of services to put to competitive tender and are much encouraged by their success to date.

44. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received supporting his proposals for the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Most correspondence on the White Paper has shown support for some proposals and criticism of others. It is not therefore appropriate to categorise the responses in the manner requested.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received from doctors in the Borders about the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" since his reply of 5 April, Official Report, column 231, to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey).

Mr. Rifkind: It is not possible to supply the information in the form requested. About 30 letters have been received from doctors in the Borders region since 5 April 1989, either direct or through hon. Members about the White Papers "Promoting Better Health" and/or "Working for Patients" and/or the new contract for GPs.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many replies have been received to the letter sent to general practitioners in Scotland by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) on 12 April.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: About 762 letters have been received from GPs since I wrote on 12 April, but it is not possible to identify which of these are specifically in response to my letter. Agreement on all the major outstanding contract issues was reached with the profession's negotiators on 4 May.

Freedom of Speech

18. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received seeking the extension of section 43 (Freedom of speech in universities, polytechnics and colleges) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 to Scotland.

29. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received seeking the extension of section 43 (Freedom of speech in universities, polytechnics and colleges) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 to Scotland.

31. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received seeking the extension of section 43 (Freedom of speech in universities, polytechnics and colleges) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 to Scotland.

37. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider extending section 43 (Freedom of speech in universities, polytechnics and colleges) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 to Scotland.

38. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider extending section 43 (Freedom of speech in universities, polytechnics and colleges) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 to Scotland.

42. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider extending section 43 (Freedom of speech in universities, polytechnics and colleges) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 to Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Hexham (Mr. Amos) and Sherwood (Mr. Stewart).

Secondary Schools (Expenditure)

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent per pupil in secondary schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in 1978-79 at constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1987-88 net current expenditure per pupil in secondary schools in Scotland at outturn prices was £2,000. This is 36 per cent. more in real terms than the comparable figure in 1978-79 which at 1987-88 prices was £1,469.

Schools

21. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received arguing that schools in Scotland should be allowed to opt out of local authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received a number of representations from individuals and groups of parents expressing interest in the possibility of self-governing status for schools. I expect that when the Self-Governing Schools Etc. (Scotland) Bill reaches the statute book parents associated with individual schools will begin to assess seriously the benefits of self-governing status for their schools.

Community Charge

23. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to be able to make a statement on the numbers who have not paid the poll tax for April.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 3 May 1989, at column 166.

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the number of people in Scotland who are on poll tax registers but who have not yet paid at least the first instalment of the poll tax; and whether he will express this figure as a percentage of all the people in Scotland who are on poll tax registers.

Mr. Lang: Local authorities are continuing to receive initial payments of the community charge. However the information required from local authorities to enable an estimate to be made of the numbers of people throughout Scotland who are liable for the community charge but have not made a payment will not become available for some months.

43. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost of publicising the implementation of the poll tax in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure to date on the public information campaign on the community charge has been in the region of £950,000.

46. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to modify the poll tax regulations.

Mr. Lang: The Government are monitoring the present community charge arrangements in Scotland. If experience shows that there is a need for any changes to the regulations or to statute we will take appropriate action.

Ayr Bypass

24. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans for the Ayr bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the section of new road planned between Drumbreck road and Glasgow city boundary which is the responsibility of Strathclyde regional council, and the new trunk road from the city boundary to Malletsheugh which together constitute the Ayr road route.

My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the report of the public local inquiry in respect of this project. The works are at present programmed to start in late 1990 but achieving this will depend upon the outcome of the inquiry.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

26. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how long it takes the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in Scotland to deal with a typical application.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since the criminal injuries compensation scheme operates on a Great Britain basis, information in this form is not available. Details of the time taken by the board to resolve cases were provided in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 20 January 1989, at column 350, by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office.

Hospitals (Opting Out)

28. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with health organisations in Scotland about the possibility of hospitals opting out under the Government's proposals for the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am currently giving consideration to this matter.

Economic Growth

30. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate of economic growth in Scotland in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The output-based estimates of Scotland's gross domestic product show that between 1986 and 1987 Scotland's economy grew by 2·4 per cent. Later information is available only for the output of the production and construction industries which grew by 5·8 per cent. between 1987 and 1988, the fastest rate of growth since 1973.

Single European Market

32. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to alter regional development policy in Scotland in the light of the forthcoming single European market.

Mr. Lang: The Government made a number of changes to regional policy in 1988 which took into account the single European market. In addition, through the Government's "Europe Open for Business" campaign information, advice and assistance is provided to all United Kingdom businesses in an effort to increase understanding during this run-up period.

Regional Policy

34. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to make regional policy for Scotland more effective.

Mr. Lang: The Government already have an effective regional policy. Provision for regional assistance in Scotland this year is approximately £120 million and we do not expect any underspend. This level of provision is broadly maintained for the following three years.

Fishing Policy

35. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he takes to co-ordinate fishing policy in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials of the Department of Agricultural and Fisheries for Scotland are in regular contact with their colleagues in the other United Kingdom fisheries Departments and representatives of the fishing industry. and they participate in EC meetings and working groups as appropriate. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office is regularly in touch with the other United Kingdom fisheries Ministers and attends meetings of the European Council of Fisheries Ministers as a member of the United Kingdom delegation.

Development Agency

36. Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next be meeting the chief executive of the Scottish Development Agency to discuss attracting industry to areas of high unemployment.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met the Agency Board, including the chief executive, on 22 May and discussed a range of issues of mutual interest.

40. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met the Agency Board on 22 May and discussed a range of issues of mutual interest.

Farmers

45. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to meet the president of the National Farmers Union of Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: My noble Friend and I have regular meetings with the union to discuss current issues affecting the farming industry in Scotland. My noble Friend met the president on 19 May and expects to meet him again at the Royal Highland show later this month.

GPs (Seniority Payments)

47. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish general practitioners about the changes to seniority payments.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A number of the letters which have been received from general practitioners referred to the proposal to replace seniority allowances and redistribute the released income through other payments. At the meeting on 4 May with the profession's negotiators it was agreed that seniority payments would be retained but reduced by the value of the new postgraduate education allowance.

"Working for Patients"

48. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on the White Paper "Working for Patients" and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Some 1,900 letters have been received, offering comments and suggestions in relation to various aspects of the White Paper.

New Towns

49. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the new towns.

Mr. Lang: It is intended that the Government's proposals for the future of the Scottish new towns will be announced before long.

Electorates

50. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average electorate in each Scottish constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average electorate of the constituencies in Scotland on publication of the 1989 electoral registers in February was 54,624.

Bathing Waters

51. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to ensure that Scotland's bathing waters conform to standards set by European Economic Community directives.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 13 April 1989, at columns 682-83, and in particular to the paper placed in the Library on that day which sets out the results of monitoring in 1988 and the plans to improve bathing waters where necessary.

Dogs

52. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will carry out a review of measures for control of dogs in Scotland and, in particular, of the powers and financial resources of local authorities in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Such an exercise is already in hand as part of a general review of the provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 upon which we intend to consult later this year. There is, however, a range of powers relating to the control of dogs already available to local authorities.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the statutory powers under which local authorities have power to control dogs; and if he will indicate which authorities are empowered to act.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows.

The Dogs Act 1906, as amended by the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, empowers the police and proper officers of district and islands councils to seize, detain and dispose of stray dogs, and prescribes procedures for dealing with dogs so detained. The Control of Dogs Order 1930, made under powers consolidated in the Animal Health Act 1981, requires dogs to wear identity discs bearing the name and address of their owner when in a public place and enables district or islands councils to make curfew regulations to control dogs. The Pet Animals Act 1951 provides for the inspection and licensing by district or islands councils of pet shops and the attachment of conditions to the licence. The Animal Boarding Establishments Act 1963 provides for the inspection and licensing of boarding establishments for dogs and cats by district or islands councils and for the attachment of conditions to the licence. The Road Traffic Act 1972 makes it an offence for a dog to be on a designated road without being held on a lead. The regulations prescribing the procedure involved in designation by regional or islands councils are contained in the Control of Dogs on Roads Order (Procedure) (Scotland) Regulations 1962. The Breeding of Dogs Act 1973 provides for the inspection and licensing by district or islands councils of dog breeding establishments and for the attachment of conditions to the licence. The Guard Dogs Act 1975 lays down requirements for the supervision of guard dogs and the licensing of guard dog kennels by district or islands councils.

There are, in addition, indirect powers such as the power conferred by section 112 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, whereby any local authority may make management rules which could include rules relating to dogs while on land or premises owned, occupied or managed by the authority.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from community groups or statutory organisations about the problems posed by lack of control of dogs; what replies he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the National Farmers Union, Scotland as well as from hon. Members and individuals about the problems posed by dogs. Most of these have urged tighter legislative controls and the introduction of a dog registration scheme. Replies to these representations have indicated that we are not convinced that registration would be an effective answer to the range of problems associated with dogs but that we intend to publish later this year a consultation paper in which other options for improving existing measures for more effective control of dogs will be explored.

Prescription and Residential Charges

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he has any plans to extend exemption from prescription charges in Scotland to people requiring long-term medication related to mental illness;

(2) whether he has any plans to introduce a sliding scale of charges for residents with mental health problems in special accommodation schemes in Scotland who have other sources of income.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: When the existing list of specified medical conditions for which exemption from prescription charges is given was drawn up it was suggested by the medical profession that it should include only readily identifiable conditions which called for prolonged medical treatment, in most cases replacement therapy. The list has been reviewed on a number of occasions by successive Governments, but on each occasion it was decided no change could be made. There are no plans to extend the list at this time or to introduce sliding scales of charges relating to patients' circumstances.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to ensure a sufficient supply of wheelchair housing for people with disabilities who wish to leave residential care or to set up home on their own; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government attach high priority to the provision of all types of special needs housing. It is for housing authorities to assess local needs. Scottish Homes has been asked in determining its expenditure programme for housing associations for 1989-90 to place more emphasis on housing provision for the disabled. I am pleased to note that the number of sheltered wheelchair and wheelchair houses provided by public agencies in Scotland has increased from 636 in 1979 to 2,586 in 1988.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of completions of (a) wheelchair housing and (b) mobility housing by (i) local authorities, (ii) housing associations and (iii) the private sector in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available. Information on housebuilding by user category has been collected centrally for authorities on a quarterly basis since 1986 but not for the breakdown required.

Leaflets

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many information leaflets were published by the Scottish Office in each of the past five years: and what was the total cost each year.

Mr. Rifkind: Leaflets have been produced in a wide range of circumstances, and central records do not make it possible to provide the information requested without incurring disproportionate cost. If the hon. Member has a particular subject area in mind, perhaps he could write to me about it.

Midwives

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many midwives there are in Scotland; how many claims for regrading he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the current year 4,119 midwives have been indexed to practise in Scotland. Claims for regrading are for health boards to deal with. Information on such claims is not held centrally.

Health Budget (Research)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of his current health budget is spent on research in Scotland as a percentage and as a cash sum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision for research expenditure in the current year is £5,144,000, or 0·2 per cent. of the total health budget. The cash figure represents an increase of nearly 12 per cent. over estimated expenditure in 1988-89.

Water

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what long-term funding his Department will be apportioning to upgrade water treatment plants in Strathclyde region.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department has asked all regional and islands authorities to provide information about improvements necessary to achieve compliance with drinking water quality standards. When this information has been fully assessed Strathclyde regional council's needs will be taken into account, along with those of other authorities, in reviewing the capital expenditure allocations for water and sewerage services in Scotland.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the reduction in capital allocation to Strathclyde regional water authority for the next financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Allocations for water supply services are not issued separately. The provisional allocation for Strathclyde region's water and sewerage programme in 1990-91 was first set in 1988 at £41 million but was increased in February 1989 to £44 million, a rise of £3 million. While this increased provisional allocation is £1 million less than the capital allocation for the present year, it is still provisional and subject to review before final allocations for 1990-91 are set.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to reduce the proposed time of 20 years given to Strathclyde regional water authority to satisfy European Community requirements for drinking water.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A time period has not yet been agreed with Strathclyde regional council for achieving full compliance with European Community drinking water standards. Water quality improvement schemes currently programmed are due for completion not later than the end of 1995.

Sheepmeat Regime

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the current negotiations on the EEC sheepmeat regime and its implications for Scottish farmers.

Mr. Rifkind: At last week's meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers member states once again made it clear that they had difficulties with the Commission's current proposals for reform of the sheepmeat regime. The Council agreed, however, that it should seek to make early progress in the first instance through discussions at official level.

Energy Sources

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to promote alternative and renewable energy sources including wind, wave, water and solar technology.

Mr. Lang: Scotland already enjoys the large-scale development of our hydro-electric resources. In addition, a comprehensive research and development programme is under way which incorporates a number of major projects based in Scotland.

Local Health Councils

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding local health council funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 June 1989]: I have received a number of representations and I am currently considering the most effective means of representing consumers interest in the NHS.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds, in cash and in real terms, his Department has allocated to local health councils since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The information is as follows:

Year	Local health council expenditure on a cash basis £'000	Local health council expenditure at 1989-90 prices[1] £'000
1979-80	430	852

Village and Community Halls (Grant Aid)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of grant aid was approved by the Scottish Education Department in 1988-89 for village and community halls in Scotland; what is the anticipated level for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 June 1989]: In 1988-89 the Scottish Education Department approved projects for the building and improvement of youth, village and community halls in Scotland to the value of £2·35 million (on which a grant of £1·14 million will become payable over the next few years assuming the projects proceed as planned). In the same year the total amount actually paid in grants in respect of these, and projects approved in earlier years, was £950,000. Provision has been made for the payment of up to £1·045 million in grant aid in 1989-90 and I am at present considering how to allocate this amount, having regard to commitments in respect of previously approved projects.

Fishing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his assessment of the current financial position of the Scottish fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 May 1989]: The value of landings reached a record high in 1987 but declined during 1988 and there are indications that this trend will continue in 1989. This is mainly because of reductions in quotas for North sea cod and haddock, but we have accepted the need for these reductions based on scientific advice to be made to secure the long-term fishing opportunities and the future prosperity of the industry.

Children (Dumbarton)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in Dumbarton constituency are dependent upon (a) supplementary benefit or income support, and (b) family income supplement or family credit in each year since 1978-79 (i) in total and (ii) as a percentage of all children in Scotland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.
I regret that this information is not available.

HEALTH

Deaf-Blind People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are deaf-blind; and how many are aged between five and 65 years.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 15 March 1989 at column 235.

Abortions

Mr. Ames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of women resident in the United Kingdom who had an abortion in 1987 who already had (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four and (e) five previous abortions;

(2) if he will list the number of women in the Basildon area health authority who had an abortion in 1987 who already had (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four or (e) five previous abortions.

Mr. Freeman: The notification form for abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 requires information about previous abortions to the woman concerned to be recorded, distinguishing between spontaneous miscarriages and legal terminations.

The table shows the information requested for abortions performed in England and Wales in 1987 for those women having had one or more previous spontaneous miscarriages or legal terminations.

Notifications having at least one previous spontaneous miscarriage and also at least one previous legal termination, and women having more than one abortion under the Act in 1987 will be counted more than once in the statistics.

Numbers of abortions performed to usual residents of (a) United Kingdom and (b) Basildon District Health Authority where the woman had had 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5 previous abortions, England and Wales, 1987

Mr. Ames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions have been performed in England and Wales under the Abortion Act 1967; how many of these abortions were performed in an emergency to save the life of a mother; and what percentage this latter figure represents of the lower, in each year since 1968.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed on girls aged 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 years of age in each year since 1968; and how many were performed to save the life of a pregnant woman.

Mr. Freeman: The information on the total number of abortions performed in England and Wales to the requested ages could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the readily available data is shown in the table, which relates to abortions performed on usual residents of England and Wales. Information on the number of these which were performed under ground 5 of the Abortion Act cannot be released for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

[1] These data relate to "under 15 years of age".

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the medical circumstances which created the need for abortions to be performed in emergency to save the life of the mother in those cases which have arisen since 1967; and if he will indicate the number of times each of those conditions has been a relevant factor.

Mr. Freeman: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what compensation he is offering to nurses at special hospitals for their loss of civil servant status;

(2) what consultations he has had with representatives of the Prison Officers Association concerning the recommendations of the Olliff report; when he next expects to meet them; and whether he will list the organisations with whom he has discussed the report;

(3) what is his policy regarding the future negotiations, with the Prison Officers Association on promotion procedures, uniforms, assisted travel, grievances, disciplinary procedure and security if the Olliff report is implemented; and whether the Prison Officers Association will still be able to negotiate locally at each special hospital;

(4) whether he will pay an official visit to Broadmoor, Rampton, Park Lane and Moss Side special hospitals to discuss the Olliff report with nurses who are members of the Prison Officers Association;

(5) whether it is his policy to act on the Olliff report recommendation that the influence of the Prison Officers Association in special hospitals must be eroded and its assessment that attitudes within the special hospitals concentrate more on the secure control of patients than their treatment;

(6) why the future conditions of service and negotiations with the Prison Officers Association at special hospitals is being transferred to the Whitley council; what date he expects this transfer to be implemented; and whether legislation is required for this and for the transfer of direct responsibility for the admission of patients from the Secretary of State to the Special Hospitals health authority;

(7) why the Olliff report on the future of special hospitals was not distributed to the Prison Officers Association.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 May 1989]: The Government are setting up the Special Hospitals Service Authority (SHSA) to take over the management functions presently exercised by my Department and the three local hospital boards, which are to be abolished later this year. These changes were announced in a ministerial statement in May 1988. Later in 1988 the Government specified the following six main national objectives for the service:

(i) to continue to ensure the protection of the public;
(ii) to ensure the provision of appropriate treatment for patients;
(iii) to provide a good quality of life for patients, and a good working environment for staff;
(iv) to develop closer working relationships with local and regional psychiatric services;
(v) to promote the hospitals as centres of excellence for the training of staff of all disciplines, in forensic and other branches of psychiatry;

(vi) to promote research into forensic psychiatry, and related conditions.

The statements referred to are in the Library.

Statutory instruments have been laid before Parliament which will establish the SHSA from 1 July 1989, and render it fully operational from 1 October 1989. From that date the SHSA will assume all functions, including the admission of patients.

There has already been extensive discussion and consultation on these important changes with staff, management and unions. I have myself visited all the four special hospitals where I met a cross section of staff and patients. Department of Health officials have also been engaged in a programme of visits to all the hospitals where they have had wide ranging discussions with all groups of staff. We are producing full briefing packs to explain the rationale for and effects of the changes. These packs will be sent to all staff and patients before 1 October, when the SHSA becomes the new employing authority for all but administrative staff.

There have been exchanges with staff side interests, including the POA. Indeed, at a meeting with my officials on 18 May the General Secretary of the POA and his colleagues were assured that their members and other non-administrative staff will suffer no material loss through the removal of Civil Service status and will remain on existing NHS terms and conditions. As pay and superannuation will not be affected, the question of compensation does not arise. The POA was also assured that it will continue to be recognised as representing its members in the special hospitals locally (in the hospitals) and centrally (with the new special health authority) in the new arrangements.

It will be for the SHS authority to consider the appropriateness of existing staff procedures in the new arrangements, and in reviewing such procedures we would expect it to talk with the relevant staff interests, including the POA. The Olliff report was a confidential, internal working document about the future operations of the Department's HQ branch responsible for the special hospitals.

Written Answers to Questions

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Debt

8. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of the public debt which will have been repaid in the three years to 1989-90.

36. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of the public debt which will have been repaid in the three years to 1989-90.

120. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of the public debt which will have been repaid in the three years to 1989-90.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that roughly one sixth of net public sector debt will have been repaid in the three years to 1989-90.

Company Cars

13. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax-payers will be affected by the increased company-car tax rates (a) in total and (b) those driving more than 18,000 business miles per annum.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The increase in company car scale charges for 1989-90 will affect about 1·4 million car drivers, of which about 0·3 million drive more than 18,000 business miles per year.

Income Tax

21. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the increased income tax payable by a married man on average earnings if the basic rate of income tax were restored to 33 per cent.

45. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the increased income tax payable by a married man on average earnings if the basic rate of income tax were restored to 33 per cent.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the increased income tax payable by a married man on average earnings if the basic rate of income tax were restored to 33 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: If the basic rate of income tax were increased to 33 per cent. a married man on average male earnings would pay an additional £15·12 per week in income tax in 1989-90.

60. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the Government's objective for the basic rate of income tax.

81. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the Government's objective for the basic rate of income tax.

83. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the Government's objective for the basic rate of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It remains the Government's aim, as my right hon. Friend announced in his 1988 Budget Statement, to reduce the basic rate of income tax to 20p in the pound as soon as it is prudent and sensible to do so.

79. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes were made in the basic rate of income tax from 1974 to 1979; and what changes have been made since 1979.

96. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes were made in the basic rate of income tax from 1974 to 1979; and what changes have been made since 1979.

118. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes were made in the basic rate of income tax from 1974 to 1979; and what changes have been made since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information is given in the table.

Year	Basic rate of income tax per cent.
1974-75	33
1975-76 to 1976-77	35
1977-78	34
1978-79	33
1979-80 to 1985-86	30
1986-87	29
1987-88	27
1988-89 to 1989-90	25

88. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the highest marginal rate of tax on income paid during the period 1974 to 1979; and what is the equivalent rate in 1989-90.

102. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the highest marginal rate of tax on income paid during the period 1974 to 1979; and what is the equivalent rate in 1989-90.

128. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the highest marginal rate of tax on income paid during the period 1974 to 1979; and what is the equivalent rate in 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In each of the years 1974-75 to 1978-79 the highest marginal rate of income tax was 83 per cent. on earned income and 98 per cent. on investment income. For 1989-90 the highest marginal rate of income tax is 40 per cent.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax revenue was paid by higher rate taxpayers in 1978-79; and what proportion was paid by them in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1978-79 higher rate taxpayers were liable to pay 20 per cent. of total income tax due. By 1988-89 their share had increased to 32 per cent.

Labour Statistics

52. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much employment in the United Kingdom has risen since 1983.

56. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much employment in the United Kingdom has risen since 1983.

58. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much employment in the United Kingdom has risen since 1983.

76. Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much employment in the United Kingdom has risen since 1983.

Mr. Major: Total employment in the United Kingdom has increased by 2,951,000 since March 1983.

64. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are now registered as self-employed; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

106. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are now registered as self-employed; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Major: In December 1988 3,048,000 people were self-employed in the United Kingdom compared with 1,906,000 in June 1979, an increase of 60 per cent.

82. Mr. Thorne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for how many months adult unemployment has fallen continuously in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: Unemployment in the United Kingdom has fallen for 33 months in succession.

Manufacturing Output

22. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual rate of growth of manufacturing output over the last two years.

69. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual rate of growth of manufacturing output over the last two years.

Mr. Major: In the two years to the first quarter of this year, manufacturing output grew at an average annual rate of 7·1 per cent.

Manufacturing Investment

23. Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest official projection for the growth of manufacturing investment in 1989.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot).

30. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Exchequer what was the level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1988.

91. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1988.

104. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Major: The level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1985 prices was £11,157 million in 1979 and £11,586 million in 1988.

Corporation Tax

24. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the total amount raised by corporation tax came from private companies, and what was the amount for the most recently available fiscal year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that information is not available about the amount of corporation tax paid by private companies. Broadly speaking, the largest 1,000 companies and building societies account for roughly three quarters of the corporation tax collected. The estimated total yield for 1988-89 was £18·4 billion.

Excise Duties

25. Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated reduction in inflation caused by a decision not to index excise duties.

Mr. Brooke: The estimated reduction in inflation in 1989-90 is around half a per cent.

66. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated reduction in inflation caused by a decision not to index excise duties.

77. Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated reduction in inflation caused by a decision not to index excise duties.

124. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated reduction in inflation caused by a decision not to index excise duties.

Mr. Lilley: Indexation of excise duties would have increased the RPI by nearly half a per cent.

Investment (GDP)

26. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries in the EEC spend a greater proportion of their gross domestic product on investment than the United Kingdom.

35. Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries in the European Economic Community spend a greater proportion of their gross domestic product on investment than the United Kingdom.

72. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries in the European Economic Community spend a greater proportion of their gross domestic product on investment than the United Kingdom.

92. Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries in the European Economic Community spend a greater proportion of their gross domestic product on investment than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: On the basis of estimates for 1987, eight.

Balance of Payments

27. Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will forecast the balance of payments in each year until 1992.

34. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will forecast the balance of payments in each year until 1992.

57. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will forecast the balance of payments in each year until 1992.

63. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will forecast the balance of payments in each year until 1992.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 provides a forecast for the current account of the balance of payments for 1989 and the first half of 1990. Forecasts for later years are not published.

29. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments for the first quarter of 1989.

31. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments for the first quarter of 1989.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones).

110. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the United Kingdom balance of payments for 1989.

116. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the United Kingdom balance of payments for 1989.

119. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the United Kingdom balance of payments for 1989.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 6 June.

Tax Harmonisation

28. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent submissions he has received on the tax harmonisation.

93. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what recent submissions he has received on tax harmonisation.

95. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent submissions he has received on tax harmonisation.

Mr. Lilley: My ministerial colleagues and I have received a number of submissions from a variety of sources.

Foreign Investment

32. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net flow of foreign direct and portfolio investment into the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Major: Direct and portfolio investment in the United Kingdom by overseas residents (net of disinvestment) is provisionally estimated at £11·2 billion in 1988.

Workplace Nurseries

14. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to the tax on workplace nurseries.

17. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to the tax on workplace nurseries.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to the tax on workplace nurseries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There is no special tax on workplace nurseries. A subsidised place in a workplace nursery is a benefit in kind and benefits in kind are subject to income tax.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards the tax treatment of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In principle, employees should pay income tax on the whole of their earnings whether received in cash or in kind. A subsidised place in a workplace nursery is a benefit in kind and any subsidy is a proper subject for tax.

Government Debt

53. Mr. Gow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the interest payable on Government debt during the current financial year, and what was the comparable figure, adjusted for inflation, for the year ended 31 March 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The latest forecast of general Government gross debt interest payments in 1989-90 is £17·1 billion as published in the 1989 Financial Statement and Budget Report. In 1987-88 prices, general Government gross debt interest is £15·1 billion in both 1978-79 and 1989-90. As a percentage of GDP, general Government gross debt interests is 4¼ per cent. in 1978-79 and 3¼ per cent. in 1989-90.

Interest Rates

18. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of current level of interest rates on the development of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Major: Manufacturing investment reached a record level in 1988 and the outlook is for continued strong growth.

55. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 14 per cent.

98. Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current interest rates in (a) the United Kingdom, and (b) the rest of the G7.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke).

117. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of establishing stable interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Interest rates are set at the appropriate level to maintain downward pressure on inflation.

Tax and Prices Index

19. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most recent estimate for the tax and prices index.

37. Mr. Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most recent estimate for the tax and prices index.

127. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most recent estimate for the tax and prices index.

Mr. Brooke: The tax and prices index increased by 8·3 per cent. over the year to April.

Directors (Salaries)

20. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average salary increase amongst the highest paid directors of the biggest 50 companies in the last year.

33. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average salary increase amongst the highest paid directors of the biggest 50 companies in the last year.

39. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average salary increase amongst the highest paid directors of the biggest 50 companies in the last year.

54. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average salary increase amongst the highest paid directors of the biggest 50 companies in the last year.

Mr. Brooke: Pay is for the parties involved to agree and it is not for the Government to intervene.

51. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated yield to the Exchequer in 1989-90 from income tax from company directors' emoluments.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The income tax liability on company directors' emoluments is estimated to have been about £3 billion in 1985-86. Estimates for later years are not yet available.

Business Start-ups

38. Mr. Burt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of business start-ups in 1988-89.

42. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of business start-ups in 1988-89.

126. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of business start-ups in 1988-89.

Mr. Major: In the calendar year 1987, the latest for which figures have been published by the Department of Employment, the net increase in the number of businesses registered for VAT was 45,000, an average of nearly 900 a week. Indications are that the rate of increase since 1987 has been even faster, and may have amounted to over 1,300 per week. The figures for 1988 will be available later in the summer.

Government Expenditure

40. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of central Government expenditure in 1988-89 expressed as a percentage of money gross domestic product; and what were the comparable figures for the previous five years.

Mr. Major: The latest available information on the percentage of money GDP at market prices accounted for by central Government expenditure is given in the table. The central Government figures on which the percentages are based exclude privatisation proceeds and grants to local authorities but include debt interest payments.

	Per cent.
1983-84	34·00
1984-85	34·50
1985-86	33·50
1986-87	33·00
1987-88	31·25
[1]1988-89	29·00

[1]April-December only.

41. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in general Government expenditure as a share of gross domestic product since 1982-83.

44. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in general Government expenditure as a share of gross domestic product since 1982-83.

48. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in general Government expenditure as a share of gross domestic product since 1982-83.

Mr. Major: The 1989 Financial Statement and Budget Report gave a figure of 39½ per cent. for the ratio of general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) to gross domestic product in 1988-89. The corresponding figure for 1982-83 was 46¼ per cent.

Inflation

43. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rate of inflation in the last month for which figures are available; and what was the rate of inflation in West Germany, France, Italy and the Netherlands in the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The current 12-month inflation rates for the countries in question are given in the weekly OECD publication "Current Economic Indicators", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

47. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current inflation rate in the United Kingdom; and what it was one year ago.

97. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current inflation rate in the United Kingdom; and what it was one year ago.

125. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current inflation rate in the United Kingdom; and what it was one year ago.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 6 June.

87. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present level of inflation.

Mr. Lawson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 6 June.

North Sea Oil

46. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of money received by the Exchequer from North sea oil since May 1979.

Mr. Major: Total tax revenues and royalties to United Kingdom oil and gas production over the fiscal years 1979-80 to 1988-89 are estimated at £65·2 billion. Receipts from the gas levy over the same period amounted to a further £3·8 billion. Further details are contained in the report by the Secretary of State for Energy to Parliament of April 1989 (the Brown Book).

Public Expenditure Survey

49. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his priorities in the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

100. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his priorities in the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

113. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his priorities in the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

Mr. Major: The public expenditure survey will be carried out within the framework of the Government's objective for public expenditure. This is to maintain a downward trend over the medium term in the ratio of general Government expenditure to GDP.

Balanced Budget

50. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when, on present trends, a balanced Budget will be achieved; and when was the last occasion a balanced Budget was achieved.

Mr. Major: The Government intend to move gradually from the present surplus towards a balanced budget over the medium term. The PSBR has been in surplus in each of the last two years, something achieved in only one previous year since the beginning of the 1950s. In all other years, the PSBR has been in deficit.

Balance of Trade (Manufactures)

59. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in manufactures in 1989.

71. Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in manufactures in 1989.

75. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in manufactures in 1989.

80. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in manufactures in 1989.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 shows a forecast deficit for trade in manufactures in 1989 of £15½ billion.

Rateable Values

61. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the Inland Revenue valuation officer to be able to inform businesses of the new rateable values following re-valuation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Inland Revenue valuation officers are to complete the revaluation and send each charging authority a copy of the proposed list for its area by 31 December 1989. The authority is then to deposit the copy at its principal office and give notice of its availability for public inspection. The list comes into force from 1 April 1990.

Personal Disposable Income

62. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of real personal disposable income for the latest full year for which figures are available.

86. Mr. Waller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of real personal disposable income for the latest full year for which figures are available.

103. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of real personal disposable income for the latest full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Real personal disposable income is estimated to have grown by 5 per cent. in 1988.

Business Investment

65. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the share of gross domestic product represented by business investment in 1988.

121. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the share of gross domestic product represented by business investment in 1988.

Mr. Major: Business investment as a share of GDP was 14·6 per cent. in 1988, the highest level recorded.

Poverty

67. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Low Pay Unit to discuss the numbers of people in poverty.

73. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Low Pay Unit to discuss the numbers of people in poverty.

89. Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Low Pay Unit to discuss the numbers of people in poverty.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of the Low Pay Unit recently.

Credit Cards

68. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the credit card companies; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend often meets representatives of financial insitutions to discuss a variety of issues.

Gross Domestic Product

70. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of gross domestic product in 1987 and 1988.

131. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of gross domestic product in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Major: Gross domestic product is estimated to have grown by 4½ per cent. in both 1987 and 1988.

Governor of the Bank of England

74. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the Governor of the Bank of England; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

101. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was discussed when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England.

105. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was discussed when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England.

107. Mr. Cabora: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was discussed when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend meets the Governor from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

International Debt

78. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet other Finance Ministers to discuss international debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer met other Finance Ministers on June 1 in the ministerial Council of the OECD. International debt was discussed among other issues.

Balance of Trade

84. Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the balance of trade in visible goods in 1989.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 6 June.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what importance he attaches to the balance of trade (a) with the rest of the EEC and (b) with the rest of the world; and what account he takes of the EEC deficit when framing his economic policies.

Mr. Major: The overall current account is one indicator among many that are assessed within the framework of the Government's financial strategy. Movements in trade balances with individual economies or groups of economies will reflect, among other developments, changes in the United Kingdom's commercial and trading arrangements with them.

Value Added Tax

85. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross earnings a one-earner family with two children on average earnings pays in value added tax in (a) 1979 and (b) now.

111. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross earnings a one-earner family with two children on average earnings pays in value added tax in (a) 1979 and (b) now.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 6 June.

Higher Rate Taxpayers

90. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax revenue was paid by higher rate taxpayers in 1978-79; and what proportion was paid by them in 1988-89.

108. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax revenue was paid by higher rate taxpayers in 1978-79; and what proportion was paid by them in 1988-89.

122. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax revenue was paid by higher rate taxpayers in 1978-79; and what proportion was paid by them in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1978-79 higher rate taxpayers were liable to pay 20 per cent. of total income tax due. By 1988-89 their share had increased to 32 per cent.

Output Statistics

94. Mr. Janman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest figures for output per hour worked in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: The April 1989 edition of the "Economic Progress Report" presented estimates by a leading academic which show that output per hour worked in the United Kingdom economy as a whole in 1986 was about 50 per cent. higher than in Japan and only 5 per cent. lower than Germany.

Tax Reform

99. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out Government policy on tax reform.

123. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out Government policy on tax reform.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government's programme of tax reform has sought to create a climate in which businesses can thrive and individual initiative and risk-taking are rewarded. A major objective has been to leave people more of their own money, so that they can choose for themselves what to do with it. In particular the Government have reduced marginal tax rates so that an extra pound of earnings or profits is really worth having. We have reduced the basic rate of income tax from 33 to 25 per cent. and set a target of 20 per cent. Business taxation has been radically restructured, leaving the main United Kingdom corporation tax rate at 35 per cent., one of the lowest in the industrialised world. Five major taxes have been abolished completely.

We have also tried to ensure that, as a general rule, people's choices are distorted by the tax system as little as reasonably possible. In general, the aim is to charge lower rates on a broader base; thereby improving incentives and reducing distortions. However, the Government has also been prepared, when it is sensible, to promote well-targeted tax reliefs which will help to make the economy work better. Other important objectives have been to provide a fair deal for married women and to simplify the tax system.

Bank Rate

109. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the bank rate on (a) 8 June 1988 and (b) 8 June 1989.

Mr. Lilley: The bank base rates stood at 8½ per cent. on 8 June 1988 and 14 per cent. on 8 June 1989.

European Monetary System

112. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on his policy on the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on that subject.

132. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the major disadvantages he has identified of including the pound sterling in the exhange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lawson: I refer the right hon. Member to the speech I made to the Royal Institute of International Affairs on 25 January.

Married Man's Allowance

114. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent consideration he has given to phasing out the married man's tax allowance.

Mr. Lamont: When independent taxation begins in April 1990 the present structure of income tax allowances will be replaced by the personal allowance and the married couple's allowance. A husband and wife will each have their own personal allowance and the new system will continue to recognise marriage through the married couple's allowance. This will be given in the first instance to the husband. The personal allowance and the married couple's allowance will together be equivalent to the present married man's allowance.

Group of Seven

115. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet his counterparts in the Group of Seven finance Ministers; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Lilley: At the economic summit in Paris in July.

Delors Report

129. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his response to the Delors committee report on economic and monetary union in the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the Government's response to the Delors committee report.

Overseas Assets

130. Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the identified stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets; and what these represent as a share of gross domestic product.

Mr. Major: An estimate of the value of the stock of United Kingdom overseas assets identified at end-1988 will be included in the Pink Book in August. The latest estimate is of the order of £115 billion to £120 billion, which represents about one quarter of money GDP.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to ensure that organisations funded by the Treasury introduce chargeable payroll deductions for charities.

Mr. Brooke: There are no plans to change the present practice of deducting donations to charities free of charge.

Indirect Taxation (EC Proposals)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the European Commission's proposals for indirect taxation and the related issue of the definition of foodstuffs.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 23 May 1989 at column 440. The Commission has yet to define "foodstuffs" for the purposes of its proposals.

EEC (Net Contribution)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net contribution to the European Economic Community in the calendar year 1989.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget in 1989 is £1,966 million, which was published in the "Statement on the 1989 Community Budget", Cm 680, in April this year.

Net Overseas Assets

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the identified stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets; and what these represent as a share of gross domestic product.

Mr. Major: An estimate of the value of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets identified at end-1988 will be included in the Pink Book in August. The latest estimate is of the order of £115 billion to £120 billion, which represents about one quarter of money GDP.

Gross Domestic Product (Business Investment)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the share of gross domestic product represented by business investment in 1988.

Mr. Major: Business investment as a share of GDP was 14·6 per cent. in 1988, the highest level recorded.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has made any study of the likely effect of a further increase in interest rates on the level of manufacturing investments in the current year.

Mr. Major: Developments in the economy are constantly monitored. Manufacturing investment is growing strongly and the outlook remains good.

Civil Servants

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has further to improve the skills and professionalism of civil servants.

Mr. Brooke: Her Majesty's Treasury is today issuing guidance to Departments on improved personnel management arrangements for two key groups, information technology staff and purchasing and supply staff. In future, most entrants to these groups will be recruited for these specific areas of work, and developed and promoted primarily on the basis of their specialised skills rather than those required for general administration. To meet their needs for specialised expertise, Departments will have the facility to recruit staff at more senior levels on a permanent basis. They will also be able to recruit, if required, on a short-term basis. There will be a greater emphasis on professional training and development for both groups. I am confident that the new arrangements will allow Departments to develop rounded professional expertise and thus further improve value for money in their IT and purchasing work.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report the value of and percentage of premium savings bonds sales made in denominations of £10, £20, £30, £40, £50, £60, £70, £80, £90 and £100 for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: Premium savings bonds are no longer issued in denominations of £60, £70, £80 or £90. The estimated value and percentage of premium savings bond sales made in denominations of £10, £20, £30, £40, £50 and £100 for the financial years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 are shown in the attached table.

HEALTH

Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in England and Wales in 1988; and what was the total number of maternities in that year.

Mr. Freeman: In 1988, there were 689,153 maternities in England and Wales. These included:

	Number
Twins	7,452
Triplets	157
Quadruplets	12
Quintuplets	1
Sextuplets or over	0
Total number of maternities with multiple births	7,622

Schoolchildren's Diets

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the final report on the survey of schoolchildren's diets undertaken in 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The report "The Diets of British Schoolchildren" from the chief medical officer's committee on medical aspects of food policy (COMA), giving the final results of the 1983 survey of schoolchildren's diets, is being published today. I welcome this highly detailed scientific document which confirms the findings that we published in the 1986 preliminary report of the survey and copies have been placed in the Library.

The information in these reports has been and continues to be an invaluable guide for the preparation of the health education messages that our children need if they are to benefit from a healthy diet. It shows beyond doubt that although our schoolchildren in all social classes were well nourished and thriving as never before, they ate far too much fat and that many of the older children, especially the girls, needed more detailed advice about their choice of foods and about spending their lunch money more wisely. The Government are continuing to encourage local education authorities and the Health Education Authority in their efforts to inform children and parents about healthy eating and to persuade them to choose a healthy diet.

Dog Attacks

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent information he has on the approximate annual cost to the National Health Service of serious attacks on children and others by dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. No information is collected centrally.

Automated Cleaning Processes

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the use by district health authorities of automated cleaning processes which emit considerable quantities of CFCs; and what steps are being taken to find alternatives.

Mr. Freeman: A minority of DHAs use automated cleaning and drying equipment in their sterile supplies departments for use prior to sterilisation of surgical equipment. Some of the older equipment will emit levels of CFCs within the statutory limit for operator safety and newer equipment involves solvent reclamation systems which considerably reduce the CFC emission levels. The three United Kingdom manufacturers of such equipment are all in the process of seeking alternative processes.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish details of the new package on pay and structure offered on 16 May to staff side representatives of Committee E; and what this will mean for operating department assistants.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 7 June 1989]: Details of the proposals, including the effect on operating department assistants, are contained in the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council documents PTB/J320. A copy has been placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men aged 70 to 75 years receive income support; and what is this figure as a proportion of the total number of men aged 70 to 75 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest estimate is that there are some 82,000 men aged 70 to 74 (inclusive) dependent on income support. This represents 9 per cent. of all men in this age group.

Loans and Grants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total value of (a) applications and payments for (i) budgetary loans, (ii) cash loans (iii) community care grants from the social fund for the 1988-89 financial year expressed in money terms and as a percentage of the available budget in respect of Department of Social Security offices covering the Nottingham, North constituency.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each Leeds social security office the funds allocated in 1988-89, and in 1989-90 for social fund (a) loans and (b) grants and the total expenditure in 1988-89 for (i) loans and (ii) grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested can be obtained from the Library.

However, social fund data for March 1989 are not yet available as a check of the figures has revealed some inaccuracies which have resulted from a new method of calculating the month end balances. The necessary adjustments are being made and the tables will be placed in the Library shortly.

In addition, the value of applications processed during December 1988 remains unavailable because of an earlier computer malfunction.

Attendance Allowance Board

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what dates in the current year the attendance allowance board has met.

Mr. Scott: The requested information is as follows:

Attendance Allowance Board
Dates of meetings in 1989 (to 6 June 1989)

10 January 1989[1]	30 March 1989[1]
17 January 1989[1]	4 April 1989[1]

Visual Handicap

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will be able to publish the report of the working group on inter-agency collaboration on visual handicap.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that this report, which was commissioned in 1987 by the then Minister for the Disabled, is now available in book form (through Her Majesty's Stationery Office). Versions in braille, large print and on tape are available from the Department of Health. I am very grateful to the members of the working group, and I hope that the report will be carefully studied by all involved in statutory and voluntary services to visually handicapped people. I know that the detailed recommendations will be carefully considered by Ministers in the Department of Health and the Welsh Office.

Disability

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he plans to publish the fourth report from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on disability.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 7 June 1989]: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has today published the fourth report on the findings of the surveys of disability in Great Britain carried out between 1985 and 1988. The report covers all the remaining aspects of circumstances of disabled adults which were not included in reports 1 and 2, which were published last year. It provides information on a wide range of topics, including the use of services; equipment and adaptations; mobility and transport; employment; social and leisure activities; and, for those in private households, the informal help and care received. For those in communal establishments, some aspects of residents' finances are described.

The large quantity of detailed and complex information contained in the report has been provided by disabled people themselves or their carers. It therefore reflects their own perception of their activities and experiences, including the type of services they receive and the disability equipment they use.

Taken together, the OPCS reports will provide the most comprehensive and detailed information ever collected about the circumstances of disabled people in this country.

We welcome comments on this report, as we have on the three already published.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Spain (Secretary of State's Visit)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the follow-up action resulting from his visit to Spain, to discuss matters of mutual concern.

Mr. Hurd: I announced on 17 May the outcome of the meetings of European Community Immigration Ministers and Trevi Ministers, which I attended in Madrid on 12 May, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) at column 208. Suitable steps are being taken to give effect to these decisions.

Dogs

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning legislation for control of dogs; what replies he has sent; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there is any action he will be taking in response to the increasingly frequent reports of serious attacks on children and others by dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what immediate action he is taking to deal with attacks by Rottweilers on people and animals.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will introduce measures to ensure that dogs with inborn aggressive tendencies must wear muzzles when in public places;

(2) if he will introduce measures to ensure that all dogs must be kept on a lead when in public places.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there is any action he will be taking in response to the increasingly frequent reports of serious attacks on children and others by dogs; if he intends to use the statutory powers that may alleviate the problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received about 55 representations and are examining the possibility of strengthening the legislation on dangerous dogs.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ban Rottweilers as domestic pets or from being held on domestic premises.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not persuaded that a ban would be the right answer, but we are examining the possibility of strengthening the legislation on dangerous dogs.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to ban Rottweilers and other dogs bred for fighting from being kept in domestic premises or as domestic pets, without the express permission of the police;

(2) what action he intends to take to deal with the problem of violent dogs and the environmental problems caused by neglected dogs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The Government are examining the possibility of strengthening the legislation on dangerous dogs.

Terrestrial Broadcasting Transmission Networks (Study)

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the study of privatisation options for the terrestrial broadcasting transmission networks which his Department commissioned from Price Waterhouse.

Mr. Hurd: I have today placed a copy of this report in the Library. Further copies are available from HMSO bookshops at a cost of £3·95.

War Criminals

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to make a statement on the position of those persons in the United Kingdom who are alleged to have committed Nazi war crimes.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member for the answer given to him on 11 May. I understand that the inquiry still expects to report this month.

Crime (Essex)

Mr. Jamnan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking in relation to crime in Essex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 11 May at column 539.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders were signed by immigration officers in each of the last five years; and how many of those were signed by officers at inspector level or above in each month since August 1988.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Deportation orders are always signed by Ministers, normally by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

In the five years from 1984-88, the numbers of notices of intention to deport under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971, against which there is a right of appeal to the independent appellate authorities, signed by members of the immigration and nationality department were as follows:

	Number
1984	2,278
1985	1,578
1986	661
1987	794
1988	1,751

Information about the number of notices of intention to deport signed by an immigration officer in this period on the authority of a responsible official in the deportation section of IND is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Since 1 August 1988, notices of intention to deport under section 3(5)(a) may be authorised by a member of the immigration service at not less than inspector level. The number so authorised (and signed by an immigration officer) since 1988 is as follows:

1988
August	82
September	114
October	121
November	208
December	159
1989
January	226
February	224
March	252
April	171

THE ARTS

Horniman Museum and Library

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish a timetable for establishing the independence of the Horniman museum and library in Forest Hill.

Mr. Luce: It is intended that the museum will be governed by an independent charitable trust following the abolition of the Inner London education authority. The necessary steps are being taken to put in place as quickly as possible an appropriate charitable trust framework for the museum.

ENVIRONMENT

Rates

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average domestic rates bill in England and Wales for 1989-90 of people in receipt of income support.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is not available.

Housing Action Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how and when he intends to conduct a ballot of the tenants of the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates in Southwark in relation to a housing action trust;

(2) whether the housing action trust ballot will be on the basis of one vote per tenancy;

(3) who will be entitled to cast the vote in a housing action trust ballot when the tenancy is in joint names.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to her on 30 January (Official Report, columns 20 and 30) and to the hon. Member for Norwood on 24 May (Official Report, column 592).

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants in Southwark, living on the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates proposed for the setting up of housing action trusts, were interviewed by the consultants Peat Marwick McLintock in preparing their report on the suitability of these estates for housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: The consultants' report acknowledges that they were unable to interview more than a small proportion of tenants living on the North Peckham and Gloucester grove estates. Nevertheless, they held in-depth interviews with 31 tenants and a similar number of people closely connected with the estates, and they used a variety of published sources to produce a good report of housing conditions in the area, with recommendations for improvements. Tenants and tenants associations on both estates are discussing the reports with the consultants as part of the current consultation exercise.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an estimate of the amount of Government support necessary for improvements to the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates along the lines of those recommended by the consultants in their report on the suitability of these estates for housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: The consultants produced an illustrative scheme for costing purposes which estimated the costs of improving the Southwark housing action trust area at around £112 million. We have allocated substantial resources to the housing action trust programme and are committed to pay for the improvements to be carried out by housing action trusts. The amount of resources for any particular trust will depend on the programme of work, to be decided in consultation with residents.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of existing and planned estate action schemes for the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates in Southwark.

Mr. Trippier: Southwark council has received previous estate action allocations amounting to some £3·75 million for the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates. The council bid unsuccessfully for Estate Action support towards housing and environmental improvements there in 1989-90, but their request for Estate Action support for the conversion of garages into local estate offices is being considered by the Department.

If Southwark submits Estate Action bids for the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates in future years, their applications, like all Estate Action bids, will be assessed on their merits.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has received of the cost of rehabilitation of Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates from his consultants on housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: The consultants produced an illustrative scheme for costing purposes which estimated the costs of improving the Southwark Housing Action Trust area at around £112 million—£68 million for North Peckham and £44 million for Gloucester grove. Local residents are now being consulted about the proposals for their estates.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the (a) total cost of monies paid to consultants and (b) the cost to his Department in relation to proposed housing action trusts for the Gloucester grove and North Peckham estates in Southwark.

Mr. Trippier: We expect that the costs in relation to the proposed Southwark housing action trust will amount to around £192,000, including VAT, when all bills have been paid. This figure covers consultants' fees and other costs involved in producing reports and leaflets about the proposals, but excludes consultants' fees under the current consultation exercise. The cost of this contract will remain commercially confidential until it has been completed.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to implement the consultants' conclusion that more money needs to be invested in the areas designated for housing action trusts in Southwark.

Mr. Trippier: We have accepted our consultants advice that substantial resources should be allocated to a housing action trust in Southwark and have made public expenditure provision accordingly.

Genetically Manipulated Organisms

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for additional legislation on the intentional release of genetically manipulated organisms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment together with the Welsh and Scottish Offices, have today published a consultation paper on proposals for additional legislation on the intentional release of genetically manipulated organisms. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Existing legislation provides comprehensive protection for the safety of persons against such organisms, but does not provide complete coverage for the environment. The aim is to have a parallel system to protect the environment and so ensure an adequate framework against which biotechnology can be properly developed and its full economic potential realised.

We are proposing to augment the existing legislation to provide a comprehensive system for environmental protection with four main elements:

- a general duty of care to protect the environment on those releasing GMOs;
- notification to Ministers by those proposing to release GMOs;
- authorisation by Ministers of proposed releases;
- appropriate enforcement of the provisions;

Interested organisations and individuals are invited to send their views to the Department by 25 August 1989.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish his best estimates of the numbers of staff involved in (a) the production and distribution of the Minister for Local Government's articles on the community charge, and (b) the direct contact made with local newspapers in connection with these articles;

(2) if he will publish his best estimates of the total cost of (a) the production and distribution of the Minister for Local Government's articles on the community charge, and (b) the direct contact made with local newspapers in connection with those articles.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 6 June 1989]: As is customary with ministerial articles, several officials made suggestions or contributions. Information officers in London and each of the seven regions helped to contact local newspapers. In all cases, these activities constituted only a small part of the duties of the officials concerned. The precise costs are therefore not readily identifiable.

TRANSPORT

Computer Reservation Systems

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the principal differences between the codes of conduct for computer reservation systems prepared by the European Civil Aviation Conference and the European Commission;

(2) what plans he has for extending the scope of the EEC code of conduct for computer reservation systems to cover non-scheduled passenger air services;

(3) what steps he will be taking to reconcile the two codes of conduct for computer reservation systems prepared by the European Civil Aviation Conference and the European Commission;

(4) when he expects to see agreement on the EEC code of conduct for computer reservation systems; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for its introduction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A regulation governing the operation of computerised reservation systems (CRSs) within the European Community was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 5 June 1989. It will come into force on 1 August, subject to certain transitional arrangements for CRSs already established in the Community.

This regulation constitutes binding and directly applicable Community law and therefore takes precedence over the ECAC code of conduct within the member states of the Community. The two codes are consistent in all essential respects. The Community code contains enforcement provisions and lays down additional requirements concerning the disclosure of personal information, displays which are not comprehensive and the provision of a display based on arrival times.

The Council of Ministers invited the Commission to examine the need for a regulation governing CRSs used for non-scheduled passenger air services and for air freight and to bring forward any necessary proposals by 31 December 1990 at the latest.

Highway Investment (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet had time to study the report "Highway Investment Needs Review: North West Region".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The massive increase in trunk roads spending announced on 18 May largely meets the needs identified in the report.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in respect of the proposed revisions to the routes of the link roads to the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No formal representations have been received although further information has been sought.

Public exhibitions of approach roads will be held shortly. They will be well publicised and the public will be invited to comment.

PRIME MINISTER

Economy

Q86. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the state of the economy.

Q137. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the state of the economy.

Q153. Mr. Mallin: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the state of the economy.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of such representations. Thanks to the policies that we have pursued for the past 10 years, and will continue to pursue, the economy is performing very well.

Low Moor, Bradford

Q104. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Low Moor in Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no such plans to do so.

EEC (Trade)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make it her policy that Her Majesty's Government will veto any proposals by the European Economic Community in the health, education, housing and social security field except insofar as this is necessary to remove impediments to trade.

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue to examine carefully all proposals for Community legislation to ensure that they are necessary to achieve the objectives of the Treaty of Rome as amended by the Single European Act and that they are appropriate to the Community's competence.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 June.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 June.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 June.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 June.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines he has issued to regional councils about registration for poll tax purposes of Royal Navy ratings who are stationed outwith Scotland.

Mr. Lang: None. It is for community charges registration officers to decide in the light of all the facts and circumstances relating to individual cases where a person, including a Royal Navy rating, is solely or mainly resident in their area and thus liable to be registered there for community charge purposes. I understand that, in the interests of achieving a measure of consistency in the treatment of service personnel, community charges registration officers have agreed with the Ministry of Defence working arrangements for their registration. However, this does not affect any individual's right of appeal against any registration decision.

Skill Shortages

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of reports commissioned by his Department on (i) skill shortages and (ii) skill shortages and the anticipated impact of 1992 on sections of Scottish industry.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 May 1989]: My Department is associated with a study commissioned by the SDA which will identify the commercial opportunities and challenges for firms in Scotland arising from the 1992 proposals.

As regards skill shortages, the Department does keep the labour market situation under review. Although no specific studies of skill shortages have been commissioned recently, a report was published last year (December 1988) on new entrants to the labour market in Scotland in the 1990s. In addition the Training Agency in Scotland conducts regular surveys of Scottish industry as part of the routine process of local labour market information gathering which collect, among other things, information on skill shortages. More specifically the Training Agency in Scotland in conjunction with the SDA has recently completed a report (April 1989) on skill shortages on the engineering and oil industries in Tayside.

WALES

Health Research

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of his health budget is spent on research in Wales as a percentage and as a cash sum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The 1989-90 health and personal social services research and development budget of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, which includes projects for England and Wales, has been increased to £19·02 million. Expenditure by my Department in 1989-90 will exceed £1 million and amount to approximately 0·08 per cent. of provision for the National Health Service in Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong (Refugees)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the refugee problem in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: There are now some 41,000 Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong. Over 12,000 have arrived in the past month. The Government are doing everything possible to help the Hong Kong authorities to cope with the influx. We are working for a successful outcome to the international conference on indo-Chinese refugees in Geneva on 13-14 June and for a comprehensive and durable solution to the problem.

Mexico (Illicit Drugs)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about measures being taken by the Government of Mexico to combat the illicit drugs problem.

Mr. Eggar: During my recent visit to Mexico I was impressed with the commitment of the new Government of President Salinas to the fight against drugs. Despite economic constraints, the Mexican Government are devoting increasing resources to drug interdiction and eradication. The recent arrest of an alleged major drug trafficker and the government drive to root out corruption are indications of their resolve.

China (British Nationals)

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to protect British nationals in China in the light of recent events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Our paramount concern at the present time is the safety and well-being of British nationals. Everything that can be done is being done and these efforts will continue until we know that all British nationals who wish to leave China have done so. Her Majesty's embassy in Peking and Consulate-General in Shanghai are, however, working under extremely difficult conditions. The embassy has assisted in arrangements for the evacuation by commercial means of several hundred students, businessmen and others with whom they have been in contact. It is important to emphasise that all airports are open and international commercial flights are operating normally.

We understand the deep anxiety of relatives of Britons in China. Firm information may not always be available or indeed possible to obtain. We are in touch with the Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA) about group tours that may still be in China. Inquiries should be made to the consular emergency unit in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office—Telephone No.: 01-270 2700—which opened on 7 June 1989.

ENERGY

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during the Downing street seminar on 26 April on the greenhouse effect and energy policy options, any representations were made on the contribution to CO_2 pollution made in the processing cycle for nuclear fuel.

Mr. Parkinson: No; the contribution to CO_2 pollution from the processing cycle of nuclear fuel is very small and depends on the sources of energy supply used to run the individual processes involved.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones), Official Report, 15 May, column 105, what assessment the Government have made of the possibility of reducing carbon dioxide emissions from the use of oil and gas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Carbon dioxide emissions are an inevitable consequence of the use of any particular fuel containing carbon, although the CO_2 release per unit of useful energy varies according to the fuel and the design of the installation. Studies are planned to investigate the possibilities of removing CO^2 from flue gas, but these are aimed more at large coal-firing plant which produce more CO_2 per unit generated than do gas and oil fired plant.

Cost-effective energy efficiency measures which lead to fuel saving, rather than substitution, can of course reduce CO_2 emissions from any fuel source.

Magnox Power Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the Central Electricity Generating Board still retains the original construction plans for each individual magnox-type nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that the CEGB has retained the construction plans for all of its magnox stations.

Agricultural Crops

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps the Government have taken and intend to take to utilise agricultural crops to substitute for fossil fuels in industries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Fuels derived from agricultural crops are covered by the Biofuels programme, the broad aim of which was described in Energy Paper No. 55 "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward".

This programme is intended to encourage the widespread commecial exploitation of biofuels by first identifying and then demonstrating where they can be both economically competitive and environmentally acceptable.

Specific agricultural crops which have been investigated within the biofuels research, development and demonstration programme include:

Straw. The development and evaluation of low cost systems for processing and burning baled straw, followed by demonstration of the best systems;

Energy forestry plantations, both coppice and single stem crops. The assessment of likely yields, costs and returns resulting from the establishment of short rotation energy forestry plantation; the investigation of mechanical energy forestry; studies of its environmental impact.

Oscillating Water Columns

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps the Government are taking to investigate and promote the use of oscillating water columns for electricity generation, and how much money has been spent on this area to date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A major element of the Department of Energy's programme of research and development into small scale wave energy is the development of an oscillating water column—Wells turbine shoreline rock gully device invented by Queen's University, Belfast. At a cost of £308,000 my Department has funded research and construction of an experimental prototype on the island of Islay. I announced to the House on 23 March that the next phase of the project, to install an air driven power turbine and generator, will now proceed, subject to contract, on the basis of the data acquired so far.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fur Farming

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to set up an independent inquiry into the conditions under which fox and mink are farmed for their fur.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The Farm Animal Welfare Council is an independent body which has only recently concluded an examination of fur farming and published a statement about it.

Dolphins

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give an estimate of the number of dolphins around Britain's coasts and their estimated numbers for any year from 1959 onwards for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

It is not at present possible to give reliable estimates of the numbers of small cetacean species, including dolphins, even for relatively small areas of coastal waters. Useful information has been derived from records of strandings and from the voluntary sightings scheme run by the United Kingdom cetacean group of the Mammals Society. Further projects are being considered by the relevant Departments and agencies.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of his working party's report into control framework and safeguards for food irradiation in the Library.

Mr. Ryder: A copy will be placed in the Library as soon as it is published.

Rabies

Mr. David Young: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to monitor the canine population for rabies.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not possible to test an animal for the presence of the disease before clinical signs appear. The disease is in any case not present in the United Kingdom.

Straw

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of straw is (a) burnt, (b) buried and (c) used to supply materials required for paper making and hardboard on average in each year.

Mr. Ryder: My Department's annual sample straw survey indicates the following breakdown for England and Wales:

Percentage of hectarage	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Burned in field percentage	37·7	36·7	27·7	27·1	27·2	23·8
Incorporated or cultivated percentage	1·8	7·1	10·4	12·4	17·6	17·6
Baled and removed percentage	60·5	56·2	61·9	60·5	55·2	58·6
Total area ('000 hectares)	3,367·8	3,431·9	3,414·6	3,416·9	3,336·5	3,305·4

No significant quantities of straw are currently used for paper making, but an estimated 1 per cent. of the total has been used for hardboard manufacture in recent years.

Desiccated Liver Powder

Mr. Gould: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will designate desiccated liver powder as a food product rather than a pharmaceutical product, so that it requires a health check.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. However, when the Imported Food Regulations 1984 are reviewed we will ensure that there is no room for doubt about the need for a health mark on imported desiccated liver except where consignments are solely for use in a licensed medicinal product.

Veterinary Surgeons

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is proposing to take to consider the supply and demand for veterinary surgeons, particularly in the light of the Riley report.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 11 April]: On behalf of United Kingdom Agriculture Ministers and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science I have appointed Dr. E. S. Page, MA, BSc as chairman of a committee to review veterinary manpower needs and demand for veterinary education. Professor K. J. Thomson, MSc Lond., MS Iowa, MA (Agric. Econ) and Mr. B. D. Hoskin, BVM & S, MRCVS, have been appointed as members of this committee.

The terms of reference of the committee are:

To assess:

(a) the need for veterinary manpower in the UK, both for the public service and the private sector; and

(b) the demand for veterinary education from home and overseas students;

and, in the light of this, to consider and make recommendations on:

(c) how any increased manpower requirement might be met having regard to constraints on public funding and to the potential funding from the UFC and other sources;

(d) what future arrangements should be developed to assess the demand for veterinary manpower and determine the number of student places.

The Universities Funding Council has decided to postpone consideration of the Riley report until the review is complete.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Balance of Trade (West Germany)

133. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom's balance of trade with West Germany in 1979 and 1988.

134. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom's balance of trade with West Germany in 1979 and 1988.

135. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom's balance of trade with West Germany in 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: The crude balance of trade with West Germany in 1979 was £1,566 million in deficit and in 1988 was, provisionally, £8,145 million in deficit.

Alcoholic Drinks

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster following the Greek Government's removal of the regulatory and other discriminatory taxes on spirits as scheduled on 1 January, what subsequent action Her Majesty's Government have taken to press for the elimination of the remaining discrimination against, inter alia, Scotch whisky as compared with ouzo and brandy.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission's infringement proceedings against the Greek Government are still in progress in the European Court of Justice and, as before, we are keeping a close watch on developments. In addition the Government took steps earlier this year to re-register with Greek authorities the United Kingdom's continued concern about VAT discrimination against, inter alia, whisky along with the United Kingdom's general dissatisfaction with the current taxation structure applied to spirituous beverages in Greece.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the outcome of the recent talks in Lisbon between the European Community Commission and the Portuguese Government concerning the discrimination in rates of alcohol tax and value added tax on spirits; and what further steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to press for the removal of the discrimination.

Mr. Alan Clark: At Her Majesty's Government's request infraction proceedings have been initiated against the Portuguese by the Commission who are still awaiting a formal response. As a result of talks held in November between the Portuguese authorities and Commission services, however, the Portuguese have taken steps to equalise tax on all alcohol, both imported and domestically produced, at 500 escudos per litre.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Italian Government's proposed requirement with effect from 1 July for all bottled alcoholic beverages include on their label an anti-litter statement and identification of the container's raw material is compatible with the European Community Commission proposal currently under discussion which would prescribe two mandatory European Community symbols for refillable and recyclable beverage containers, respectively; if he will seek suspension or postponement of the requirement for United Kingdom alcoholic beverages exports to Italy pending agreement on the European Community directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: If introduced, the Italian Government's requirement would pre-empt the discussions which are currently taking place between member states and the Commission on the Commission's proposed amendment to the Beverage Containers Directive EC 185/339, which would require labelling as to material, recyclability and refillability. I understand that Italy has declared its intention formally to notify the Commission of the proposed new law. My Department is keeping in touch with the Commission to ensure that the notification procedure, which would allow member states' observations during a standstill period, is gone through before the law can be introduced. The United Kingdom's position is that new national legislation in this area is inappropriate while discussions are continuing on a Community regime.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report, a table showing for the years 1970 to date for the European Economic Community 12 and for the rest of the world, imports and exports of manufactures less erratics, at current and at 1988 prices, together with an index of relative export prices based on 1970 = 100.

Mr. Alan Clark: Taking the EC and the rest of the world as two blocks, and disregarding intra trade within them, EC exports may be considered equal to the rest of the world's imports and vice versa. Similarly relative export prices of EC to the rest of the world will be equivalent to EC's export prices relative to import prices. Because figures for a consistent configuration of the EC are not readily available for the period, a volume index is provided rather than a constant price series. It is not practical to identify and exclude erratic items for these trading blocks.

The available figures are as follows:

EC trade in manufactures[1] with rest of world

	Value[2]		Volume[3] (1980 = 100)		Terms of trade[4] (1980 = 100)

Buses

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Ulsterbus Ltd. and Citybus Ltd. will be published.

Mr. Maude: The report is published today. The Commission concluded that Ulsterbus and Citybus ran a very efficient operation in spite of the severe problems presented by civil disorder.

The Commission say that the companies have had to cope with a high level of civil disorder which has presented many severe problems, not least the destruction of over 1,100 buses since 1969 and many more damaged. Nevertheless, they found an efficient, low-cost, lean organisation with short chains of command, supported by loyal, hard-working and frequently courageous staff.

They also found that there was little scope for the companies to reduce costs without affecting the quality of service provided and that:

(a) manpower and vehicles were efficiently used and maintenance procedures were effective;
(b) methods of determining the nature, amount and timing of capital expenditure would benefit from the use of systematic appraisal techniques and of whole-life costing;
(c) further studies and experimentation were needed to refine the relationship between fares and costs; and
(d) the companies' efforts to take more account of the impact of quality of service on demand and to make greater use of minibuses were worthy of support.

They also make recommendations on the financial framework and management information systems, comment on the competition from the Black Taxis and discuss the question of fares evasion.

In terms of priorities for action they first endorse and make recommendations about implementing the companies' new market-led approach and its emphasis on the needs of the customer and, secondly, recommend a clear financial framework in line with the 1978 White Paper on nationalised industries.

The Commission found that neither company was pursuing a course of conduct which operated against the public interest. They were more than impressed by the dedication of the companies' staff at all levels to maintaining their services to the public in the face of severe harassment.

Ulsterbus Limited and Citybus Limited will be producing a preliminary response to the Commission's findings within 3-4 months, in the light of which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will make a statement.

Imports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what amount of imports came to the United Kingdom in 1988 for each £100 of exports; and what was the comparable figure in 1970.

Mr. Alan Clark: Imports into the United Kingdom in 1988 were estimated to be £126 for each £100 of exports on a balance of payments basis. The comparable figure for 1970 was £100.

Balance of Trade (EEC)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the balance of trade with the EEC in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has made no estimate of the 1989 United Kingdom trade balance with the rest of the European Community.

Alcoholic Drinks

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from regional and local brewers about the consequences of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I am aware that there has been considerable speculation in recent weeks about the discussions taking place with the Brewers Society and other interested parties.

The principal concern, both of the MMC and the Government, is the dominant market position of the national brewers, who account for 75 per cent. of United Kingdom beer production, 74 per cent. of the brewer-owned tied estate, and 86 per cent. of loan ties. We have no intention of introducing measures which might adversely affect the competitive position of regional and local brewers. Their continued success is vital to achieving the objective of a freer market with wider choice which was behind the MMC's recommendations.

The MMC's principal proposal, which we are still considering, was to limit pub ownership to a maximum of 2,000—a proposal which of its nature applies only to the national brewers. I can say that our intention is that certain measures, in particular the requirement to allow tenants to choose a cask conditioned guest beer; the abolition of the tie on low alcohol and non alcoholic beers, ciders, wines and spirits and soft drinks; and any measures to reduce local monopoly, should apply to the national brewers but not to other brewers.

There is general agreement that greater security should be provided for tenants. There appears to be a consensus that while it would be appropriate to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 to remove the present exception for licensed premises, it would not be right to go further and require additional provisions for tenants' protection in a mandatory brewers code of practice.

DEFENCE

Federal Republic of Germany

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the United Kingdom military contribution to the defence of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British Army of the Rhine and RAF Germany are important parts of the overall United Kingdom contribution to NATO and they have an essential role to play in the defence of the European mainland. Full details of their composition and roles are contained in the 1989 Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm. 675-I).

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the most serious accident that has taken place in or near dock in British waters of a British or American nuclear-powered submarine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Comprehensive records of accidents involving nuclear submarines since the start of the nuclear submarine programme are not readily available. The most serious accident in terms of harm resulting to people is believed to be the death of a Royal Navy officer who fell from HMS Dreadnought while in dock at Chatham in 1976. There has never been any accident involving a Royal Navy submarine which has led to a radiological hazard to service personnel or members of the public.

The United States would be obliged under a bilateral agreement to inform Her Majesty's Government immediately in the event of an accident involving the reactor of a nuclear-powered warship visiting the United Kingdom; no such accident has been reported to us.

Radiation

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further radiation checks have been carried out on Royal Navy sailors and personnel exposed to nuclear weapons and reactors; and what were the findings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Medical records of all naval personnel are analysed annually, and any health trends are identified. There have been no special surveys to determine whether there is any evidence of medical disorders arising from exposure of Royal Navy nuclear submarine personnel to radiation. However, routine medical surveillance is carried out for those Royal Naval personnel designated as radiation workers in accordance with the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Radiation dose records are kept for RN radiation workers, and statistics of doses received were published in the replies I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 20 March at columns 477-8 and on 2 May at columns 61-2 this year.

Regular radiation surveys are carried out on board nuclear-powered submarines to ensure that personnel not designated as radiation workers do not receive any significant radiation doses.

Lance Missiles

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation first deployed the short-range nuclear Lance MGM-52C missile in West Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO first deployed the Lance missile system in West Germany in 1972.

Plessey Takeover

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he proposes to ensure continued competition for defence-related research and development work between the wholly-owned laboratories of GEC and those in which they will have a 50 per cent. share following the acquisition of the Plessey Company by GEC Siemens.

Mr. Sainsbury: If the merger were to proceed, the Ministry of Defence would expect to retain competition for research contracts and would involve GEC, GEC/Siemens and other companies, whenever it was appropriate.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being taken by his Department to safeguard the national interest in the event that, following their acquisition of the company, GEC and Siemens will jointly own Plessey's research and technology facilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report accepted that if the merger were to go ahead it would be necessary for GEC and Siemens to give certain undertakings to meet the requirements of national security. These are currently under negotiation. Because of their nature, they were not made public in the MMC report and I cannot elaborate further.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he proposes to ensure that competition continues for the supply to the United Kingdom of the JTIDs system in the event that GEC and Siemens succeed in acquiring the Plessey Company.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission recommended that GEC and Siemens should undertake to ensure that access to the technology and the licences for production of JTIDS equipment be available on terms satisfactory to the MOD, to competing companies designated by the MOD. Negotiations are continuing to secure such an undertaking.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he proposes to ensure that national security is safeguarded when JTIDS information is more widely disseminated in order to maintain competition for the supply of the system to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are well established procedures for safeguarding national security when sensitive classified information is released to companies. These procedures will, of course, apply in this case.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what safeguards are being sought from GEC for the supply to the United Kingdom of the JTIDS system in the event that GEC and Siemens succeed in acquiring the Plessey Company;

(2) what safeguards are being sought from GEC/Siemens for the supply to the United Kingdom of the JTIDS system in the event that GEC and Siemens succeed in acquiring the Plessey Company;

(3) what safeguards are being sought from Siemens for the supply to the United Kingdom of the JTIDS system in the event that GEC and Siemens succeed in acquiring the Plessey Company.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission recommended that GEC and Siemens should undertake to ensure that access to the technology and the licences for production of JTIDS equipment be made available on terms acceptable to the MOD. An undertaking is being sought from GEC and Siemens to this end. Negotiations are continuing and it would be inappropriate to comment further.

Bristol Channel (Survey)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the hydrographic surveys of the outer Bristol channel between Ilfracombe and the Gower peninsula were carried out; whether those surveys showed changes in sedimentation patterns in the estuary since the previous surveys of 1965 to 1972; what hydrographic surveys were conducted in 1988; what hydrographic surveys are being conducted in 1989; and when it is intended that the inner Bristol channel should be re-surveyed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest hydrographic survey of the area between the Gower peninsula and Ilfracombe was carried out between September 1987 and June 1988 by HMS Beagle. This survey did not show any major change in the general form of the seabed since the previous survey, which dates mainly from 1949.

No additional survey was conducted in this area in 1988. In 1989 work is in hand to survey the area between Port Talbot and Porthcawl by HMS Fawn. In addition, a contract has been placed by the Ministry of Defence for a further survey of an area along the southern coast of the Bristol channel from Lynmouth to Watchet and thence extending northeastward to the approaches to Cardiff and Newport. This work will complete the re-survey of the Bristol channel from the Gower peninsula to Newport with the exception of a small area in the approaches to Bridgwater. The remaining areas of the Bristol Channel are the responsibility of the port authorities of Bridgwater, Bristol, Cardiff and Newport.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the extent to which the effectiveness of the Tornado in European defence is enhanced by its nuclear weapons capability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Dual-capable Tornado aircraft constitute a vital component in NATO's theatre nuclear force posture in Europe.

Armed Forces Personnel (Other Paid Employment)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards serving members of the armed forces also being engaged in other paid employment.

Mr. Neubert: In accordance with Queen's Regulations a member of the regular forces may not, without Ministry of Defence approval, accept any continuous employment of profit during his full-time service. This includes carrying on a profession, engaging in trade or acceptance of any form of profitable employment with a corporation, company, partnership etc. Subject to certain conditions and the approval of his commanding officer, a member of the regular forces may accept temporary employment during normal leave or part-time employment during off-duty hours.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries in addition to the United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, France and the United Kingdom which he assesses as having a nuclear weapon capacity, a ballistic weapons delivery capacity or both nuclear capacity and ballistic delivery capacity.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

No other country has declared itself to have a nuclear weapon capacity, although certain other countries may have the technological capability to produce nuclear weapons. We strongly support the principle of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, and as a depositary power, we work actively for the widest adherence to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. It is not possible to draw up a precise list of countries possessing a ballistic weapon delivery capacity, since different weapons programmes are at different stages. However, the spread of ballistic missiles is a subject of increasing concern. The problem is widespread and as a founder member of the missile technology control regime (MTCR) the United Kingdom urges all countries to adopt the guidelines formulated by the seven governments to control the transfer of equipment and technology which could make a contribution to any missile system capable of delivering a nuclear weapon.

TRANSPORT

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will give a decision on whether to permit an extension of operating hours at Leeds-Bradford airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A joint decision by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment will be made as soon as possible.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities motorway service areas offer to heavy goods vehicles and other professional drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: MSAs provide for all motorway users. They provide a minimum stipulated and increasingly widely known level of service. This includes free parking for all classes of vehicle for at least two hours; free toilets; hot and cold drinks; cold food 24 hours a day throughout the year.

Parking areas for HGVs, coaches, and cars are apportioned in relation to traffic demand.

At all but one existing MSA, HGV drivers can stay overnight for a small charge which often includes a meal voucher. Many service areas provide separate eating facilities for commercial drivers and showers and shaving points. Provision of showers and shaving points will be the norm at new MSAs.

Journalists (Coach Trip)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the purpose of his Department's coach trip in London for journalists on 2 June; how many journalists accepted the Department's invitation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The purpose of the visit was twofold; to show at first hand the environmental benefits to residents along and around Rochester way from the new relief road, which has reduced accidents by 30 per cent. in six months and to contrast this with the road congestion problems currently afflicting the Archway area. The Department's proposals for a new western environmental improvement route (the only major road proposal in inner London made by the Department in the past three years) would relieve the many transport problems in the area around the Earl's Court one-way system and improve conditions for residents and shoppers.

The visit was organised following a series of press reports in publications as diverse as The Observer (Section 5, 28 May) and City Limits magazine (11-18 May) criticising the four London assessment studies commissioned by the Department. These unbalanced reports seemed to indicate that the Department's explanations of the aims and objectives of the studies were not being understood or published.

The objectives of the studies are:

- To promote accessiblity
- To support employment, economic growth and regeneration
- To develop an efficient transport system
- To improve the environment
- To enhance safety for travellers, including pedestrians

The following was the media's response to the coach trip invitation:

- No radio journalists attended
- No television journalists attended
- No national newspaper journalists attended
- Only one journalist attended, from a transport newsletter

We shall offer the coach trip again. It is most important for the media and those who rely on it for their information to understand that the assessment studies are about improving conditions for Londoners, and to appreciate that the Department will put forward only solutions which offer net benefits.

Motorway Service Areas (M25)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the provision of motorway service areas on the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The strategy for provision of MSAs on the M25 was developed following public consultation in 1983. Decisions in principle were made in 1984 to promote four MSAs, at the compass cardinal points and at very roughly 30 mile intervals, the interval used on the motorway network as a whole.

The then Minister of State agreed in August 1985 that the MSA for the northern sector at South Mimms would be developed by BP. This was an exceptional arrangement. The other three sites, at Clacket lane, Thurrock and Iver, were to be developed following competitive tender, in conformity with Government policy for marketing MSAs announced by the then Secretary of State on 4 August 1980. Current policy has been reaffirmed in this House on 17 March this year at columns 372-73.

South Mimms opened for cars and coaches in 1987 and is due to provide facilities for HGVs at this end of the year.

Public inquiries into the Department's proposals for Clacket lane near Westerham, together with two competing private proposals, were held in 1986 and 1987. A further site visit was made in May 1988 by the inspector who conducted the inquiries to examine the impact of the October 1987 storm. The Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 15 December 1988 his decision to allow the Department's proposals to go ahead but refusing the two competing proposals. The Department is ready to go to tender but now has to delay because of a legal challenge into the planning decisions by one of the parties.

We estimate that over 300,000 vehicles per month would wish to use an MSA in the area had it been open, but will not be able to do so until the challenge is resolved and an MSA built.

At Thurrock outline planning clearance has been obtained, the compulsory purchase order made and the developer appointed. Preliminary ground treatment work on the site has been underway by agreement since 1988. The local planning authority has objected to the proposed design of the buildings. That objection has been referred to the Secretary of State for the Environment under DoE circular 18/84 procedures. Subject to an early resolution this should allow opening in 1990.

The position at Iver is more problematic. This is a particularly heavy trafficked part of the motorway where widening proposals are likely to have a significant impact. A further statement will be made as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Chinese Students

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Chinese students are studying full or part-time in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: In 1987-88 there were 1,200 full-time and part-time students in further and higher education in the United Kingdom from the People's Republic of China.

Institute of Arable Crops Research

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on why the Institute of Arable Crops Research has not introduced chargeable payroll deductions for charities; and what information he has on whether the payroll computer system it is introducing would be able to make such deductions.

Mr. Jackson: This Department has received no such representations. The new payroll computer system, which is currently under consideration for use in the agricultural and food research service, would enable all staff, including those at the Institute of Arable Crops Research to participate in the payroll giving scheme, if they wished to do so.

Private Schools

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many inspections of private schools there have been by Her Majesty's Inspectorate in the past five years; and what steps were taken to follow-up recommendations about necessary improvements either in the teaching or the quality of the school buildings subsequent to the publishing of a report on a school.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools operates a continuing programme of visits to independent schools which do not necessarily result in full inspection reports. Nevertheless, the inspectorate has issued 34 reports on independent schools other than those which serve children with special educational needs since June 1984. In each case, the recommendations made in the report were drawn to the proprietor's attention in an accompanying official letter. In certain cases, the proprietor may also have been asked to provide a report on progress within a specified timescale. In subsequent visits, the inspectorate takes particular note of failure to implement the recommendations made. Such failure may lead me to serve a notice of complaint against the proprietor. Between January, 1984, and December 1988, 16 notices of complaint were served following full inspections; a further five were served where fire precautions were found to be deficient and three were served where a proprietor or teacher was not considered a proper person.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to provide that all private schools should have a board of governors; and if he has any plans to seek to amend the legal structure covering such establishments so as to give parents adequate opportunities for consultation and representation about the staffing and welfare provision.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no plans to do so. However, I would certainly encourage individual schools to establish a broadly based governing structure, where they do not already have one, and to involve parents closely in all aspects of its activity. Parents are well placed to demand a voice.

Pupils (Welfare Assessment)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures are taken by Her Majesty's inspectorate to assess the social welfare of pupils; whether any of his inspection staff have any training in matters relating to child abuse.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's Inspectorate assesses the quality of pastoral care provision in schools as well as assessing teaching and learning in all subjects. This range of activities includes tutorial arrangements, the social structures devised by the schools and the quality of pupils' responses to these. More generally, Her Majesty's Inspectorate pays attention to children's attendance and behaviour, to relationships both within lessons and about the school, and to teachers' records on pupils' development and progress. Inspectors also have regard during inspection to the qualifications and experience of teachers at the school.

In schools where residential accommodation is provided, Her Majesty's Inspectorate pays attention to the nature and suitability of the accommodation, and to the daily routines of pupils both during school time and at evenings and weekends in order to assess the contributions that these make to the pupils' overall education.

Her Majesty's inspectorate has designated inspectors with national responsibility for child abuse and for counselling. A number of Her Majesty's inspectors have dealt with child abuse cases before joining the inspectorate; others have worked as educational psychologists and therefore also have experience of case-work relating to child abuse. In addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate runs internal training courses on child protection, and is currently running a course for "named persons" in LEAs who have responsibility for child protection. In December, Her Majesty's inspectorate will run a course for representatives from each LEA for those involved in training for child protection. The training programme therefore extends beyond the inspectorate itself.

Castle Hill School, Shropshire

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has completed his consideration of the registration and approval of Castle Hill school, Shropshire.

Mrs. Rumbold: Nearly all its pupils are being withdrawn from the school. My right hon. Friend is accordingly seeking confirmation from the proprietor that he is taking steps to close it.

I am placing in the Library copies of the letters to the school and to local education authorities informing them of this action.

PRIME MINISTER

Single Market

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister which sector of European Community negotiations she will control personally in the run-up to 1992.

The Prime Minister: The Government as a whole are responsible for policy towards the European Community.

EC Directives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those European Community directives currently not fully implemented; which topics they relate to; and when Her Majesty's Government will implement each of them.

The Prime Minister: The Official Journal of the European Communities, c310, volume 31 of 5 December 1988, which is available in the Library, shows that at 31 December 1987 the United Kingdom had not fully implemented 148 of 784 applicable directives. Detailed information on the topics to which these relate and the projected date of enactment of United Kingdom legislation could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answer (Cost)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of supplying the answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) of 25 May, Official Report, columns 695-719.

The Prime Minister: The reply was assembled from material provided by a wide range of Departments. The total cost of time of those who contributed, including secretarial staff, measured by salary, overheads and other costs, including printing, is estimated at £4,600.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Overseas Residents (Voting Rights)

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in the past two years supporting an extension of eligibility for voting rights of United Kingdom citizens living abroad; and when he expects to be able to make an announcement concerning possible legislation on the subject.

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends making a statement about the reform of the franchise qualifications for Britons living abroad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Between January 1987 and May 1989, we received eight parliamentary questions and 47 letters from hon. and right hon. Members and 70 representations on this subject directly from members of the general public and organisations representing Britons abroad. We hope shortly to be in a position to announce our plans to extend the franchise for British citizens living overseas.

Remand

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time spent on remand in custody awaiting trial at the latest date for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure 12 months previously.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1987 the average time spent on remand in custody awaiting trial was 56 days for men and 45 days for women, compared with 57 days for men and 44 days for women in 1986 (Table 2.1 of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1987" (Cm. 547), a copy of which is in the Library). Provisional data for 1988 indicate very little change for males but a further increase for females.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present male and female prison remand population for England and Wales; and how many of those remand prisoners belong to an ethnic minority group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Untried and convicted unsentenced population[1] of prison service establishments in England and Wales on 31 December 1988: by type of prisoner and ethnic origin

	Untried	Convicted unsentenced
White	6,600	1,190
West Indian, Guyanese, African	1,200	140
Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi	220	30
Chinese, Arab, Mixed origin	180	30
Other, not recorded (including refusals)	610	100
Total	8,800	1,490

[1] Provisional figures.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were remanded in custody in England and Wales during 1987 for an offence of criminal damage involving less than £2,000.

Mr. John Patten: The available information on those proceeded against for an indictable offence of criminal damage who were remanded in custody, which may be incomplete, is published in tables 8.8 and 8.10 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, 1987". Such figures will not include proceedings for single offences involving criminal damage of value £400 or less.

Female Police Officers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 499, to the hon. Member for Don Valley in respect of female police officers and firearms, he will publish such information on this subject as is either held centrally or could be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hurd: No information on this subject is held centrally, and no statistical information could be obtained at this time without disproportionate cost. Female police officers are, however, fully entitled to volunteer to become authorised firearms officers and are subject to the same selection and training procedures as male officers.

Privacy

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to announce the composition of the inquiry into privacy and related matters;

(2) whether the terms of reference of the inquiry into privacy and related matters will include aspects of the law of defamation.

Mr. Renton: Consideration is still being given to the composition and terms of reference of the review of privacy and related matters. My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration detainees have escaped from Harmondsworth immigration detention centre in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Renton: Full records are not available for the period before 1986. The number of absconders in each year since 1986 was:

	Number
1986	38
1987	64
1988	76
1989[1]	15

[1] to 31 May

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into prison as fine defaulters in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information was published in table 7.2 of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1987" (Cm. 547), a copy of which is in the Library.

Prison Visitors

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations cover the searching of prison visitors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Rule 86(1) of the prison rules 1964 and rule 70(1) of the young offender institution rules 1988 provide that any person entering or leaving an establishment may be searched.

Cash-point Thefts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received, and from whom, regarding cash-point theft.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has now concluded his consultation with the Central Conference of Chief Constables on its recommendations regarding the proposed register for missing persons; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. My right hon. Friend is now considering the implications of the ACPO report.

Bail Statistics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were remanded in custody and subsequently bailed and failed to surrender to court on the date of their trial in England and Wales for the latest year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were bailed and subsequently failed to surrender to court on the date of their trial in England and Wales for the latest year for which statistics are available.

Mr. John Patten: The available information, which may be incomplete, relates to those who failed to appear having been bailed at magistrates' courts or the Crown court and is published annually in "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, 1987" (table 8.12 and paragraph 8.16 of the issue for 1987, Cm. 498).

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were bailed by the court in England and Wales and subsequently committed a further offence before the date of their trial in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The most recent figures available on offending while on bail relate to 1978 and were published in Home Office Statistical Department Bulletin 22/81, "Estimates of Offending of those on Bail".

Prison Population

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the remand and convicted and unsentenced prison population in England and Wales for the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to records held centrally on 30 April 1989 there were about 8,780 untried and 1,780 convicted unsentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 55 untried prisoners were held in police cells.

Passports

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the following information in respect of each passport office for each of the past five years, the (a) number of staff, (b) number of passport applications, (c) number issued, (d) number of applications per member of staff employed and (e) number of passports issued per member of staff.

Mr. Renton: The information as to numbers of staff employed and passports issued is given in the tables. The figures for staff employed include headquarters, management and support staff, who are not directly involved in the examination of passport applications. The daily output of examining staff varies according to the volume of applications being dealt with in a particular period, and yearly averages are not calculated. During the present seasonal peak, staff in the six United Kingdom passport offices are examining, on average, around 90 applications each day.

Public Order Act 1986

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received from Salisbury district council an application under section 13 of the Public Order Act 1986, to make an order prohibiting processions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Salisbury district council, in response to an application from the chief constable of Wiltshire, sought my consent on 23 May to an order under section 13 of the Public Order Act 1986. This was based on the chief constable's assessment that other powers available to him would not be sufficient to prevent the holding of certain classes of public procession in the vicinity of Stonehenge from resulting in serious public disorder. I have therefore given my consent to an order prohibiting the holding of all public processions within a radius of four miles from the monument at Stonehenge, moving in the direction of Stonehenge, other than normal funeral processions, from Saturday 10 June until Sunday 25 June.

Waste Transport (Smuggling)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department implements to police large-scale wastes transported internationally, and used as a medium for smuggling.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The importation of special and hazardous waste is regulated by the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 and the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988. Consignments of such wastes must be accompanied by consignment notes, copies of which are sent to the waste disposal authority for the area in which the waste enters the United Kingdom and the area of final disposal. Customs retain the power to regulate importations and exportations of goods, and to search all vessels in United Kingdom territorial waters. Waste is subject to normal customs checks which are based on local knowledge, risk assessment and intelligence.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Funeral Costs (Report)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response has been received from the National Association of Funeral Directors to the report on funeral costs by the Office of Fair Trading published in January.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I shall ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Departmental Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Forth: This depends upon the matter under discussion.

WALES

Eye Tests

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the fall in the number of people coming forward for eye tests since April 1989 in (a) West Glamorgan and (b) Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total expenditure of the Welsh Development Agency in each parliamentary constituency in each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency does not maintain details of expenditure in the form requested.

EC Funding

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list on a district council basis the amount of funding received from the European Community's regional fund, social fund and agricultural guidance and guarantee fund since 1 January 1980.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information as requested is given in the following tables:

NATIONAL FINANCE

South African Coal (Teesport)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much South African coal was discharged by the SS Ave during its recent visit to Teesport.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 June 1989]: It is not normal practice to disclose information about the nature or quantities in specific importations.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what dues and other taxes were paid by the owners of the SS Ave which recently discharged a cargo of South African coal at Teesport.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Imported coal is free of customs duties and zero-rated for VAT purposes. Port authority dues are usually payable on a ship and its cargo.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the National Savings Department has decided to increase the minimum purchase of premium bonds to £100 on 1 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 June 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 5 May at column 255.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Factory-Farmed Animals

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider making it compulsory for all factory-farmed animals to be labelled as such.

Mr. Ryder: No, Sir. While I fully recognise the importance of informative food labelling I see no need for a statutory labelling requirement for factory farmed products. There would, in any case, be serious enforcement difficulties as it is not possible to distinguish analytically between free range and factory farmed products. There is, of course, nothing to prevent voluntary labelling to indicate when meat is not from factory farmed products.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Female Police Officers (Firearms)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many female police officers are currently qualified to carry firearms; what were the figures five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list by year for the last 10 years (a) in how many operations firearms were issued to female police officers and (b) in how many of these operations shots were fired by female police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested. However I understand from the chief constable that female officers in the RUC do not normally carry firearms, nor are firearms normally issued to officers in respect of specific operations.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: This depends on the matter under discussion.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Businesses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice his Department gives to small companies seeking specialist financial assistance with regard to further business development (a) when approached directly, (b) in general promotional literature and (c) at exhibitions attended by his Department.

Mr. Cope: The Department's small firms service provides advice on financial management and control, and the presentation of a case to potential lenders or investors. It also gives information on sources and methods of raising finance, including the loan guarantee scheme (LGS), which enables banks to lend to small firms without security or a track record.

Publications by the small firms service and the Department include free leaflets giving advice on trade credit, accounting, prompt payment and the LGS.

Radiation

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further steps he is taking to reduce the exposure to occupational radiation of workers in the nuclear industry; and by how much the present exposure level has been reduced from earlier levels.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Under the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 which are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive, all employers are required to ensure that, amongst other matters, doses of ionising radiations received by employees are kept as low as reasonably practicable and not merely below the relevant statutory limits. In the light of recent international advice and continuing revision of risk estimates for ionising radiations, HSE inspectors are ensuring that greater attention is paid to this requirement. Dosimetric information published by the principal employers in the industry indicate an overall long term downward trend in exposure levels.

Bridging Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, by region, how many 16 and 17-year-olds were in receipt of bridging allowance for each of the latest available three months.

Mr. Cope: Figures for the number of young people in receipt of bridging allowance by region are provided in the table:

Region	Bridging Allowance
	March (9 March 1989)	April (13 April 1989)	May (11 May 1989)
East Midlands	1,380	1,170	1,075
West Midlands	1,507	1,298	1,202

Strikes

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to permit a legal strike without a ballot amongst the strikers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. It is not illegal for a union to call a strike without a ballot of its members. However, if a union chose to do so, it would render itself liable to legal action for damages from the employers at whom the action is directed, or from the suppliers of customers of those employers, and to an action in restraint from any of those parties or from any of the union's members which it had induced to take action.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of registered vacancies as a percentage of the unemployment figure in the Leeds metropolitan district for each of the years April 1979 to 1989; and what was the average number of vacancies in the Leeds area for the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lee: The following is the available information which is also in the Library. The table shows the monthly average numbers of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres covering an area closely corresponding to the Leeds metropolitan district, together with the monthly average number of unemployed claimants in Leeds, for the years 1983 to 1988. Unemployment figures will be slightly affected by changes to the count.

It is not valid to compare ratios of unfilled vacancies to numbers of unemployed claimants since only about a third of vacancies in the economy are reported to jobcentres and this proportion will tend to vary over time and between regions.

Council for Social Aid, Manchester

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to why the Council for Social Aid in Manchester, and training manager for employment training, has gone into liquidation.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand that the directors of Manchester Diocesan Church of England Council for Social Aid Ltd. felt that they were unable to meet their financial obligations and for this reason, and in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act and the Insolvency Act, decided to cease trading and to place the company into voluntary liquidation.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the number of workers who will be made redundant as a result of the failure of the Council for Social Aid, Manchester; what is the number of workers who will be or are being offered alternative employment; what guarantees were given to staff in terms of redundancy payments and outstanding earnings; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the total number of trainees on the scheme run by the Council for Social Aid, Manchester, at the time of liquidation; what was the number of trainees who will be offered training places on other ET schemes; what guarantees were made to trainees in respect of the training allowance and child care payments; what is the amount of the debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand that approximately 200 people have been made redundant following the closure of Manchester Diocesan Church of England Council for Social Aid Ltd.

Any redundancy payments or outstanding earnings are a matter for the company's liquidators who will deal with these matters in the normal way in such cases.

The number of employees who are offered alternative employment will depend on the local demand for their services.

At the time Diocesan Church of England Council for Social Aid Ltd. ceased trading there were 1,011 ET trainees in training. All of these have been, or will shortly be, offered a training place with an alternative training manager. In the meantime all trainees remain on their training allowance.

In addition, until trainees are found alternative training managers, child care costs will be met where this is necessary.

The total amount of the company's debt is not known to my Department and is a matter for the liquidators.

My major concern now is to ensure that everything possible is being done to minimise the disruption for trainees so that they can carry on developing their skills and improving their job prospects.

HEALTH

Clinical Cytogeneticists

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the salary negotiations for clinical cytogeneticists.

Mr. Mellor: The pay of clinical cytogeneticists is a matter for negotiation between the management side of the Scientific and Professional Staffs Council and the staff side representing scientists employed in the National Health Service. Negotiations are continuing on the staff side pay claim for 1989-90.

Water Supplies (Fluoridation)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which countries, having undertaken the fluoridation of their water supplies, have since abandoned it and on what grounds.

Mr. Freeman: Although no specific legislative power was provided, fluoridation was introduced experimentally in the Netherlands in the 1950s. It was discontinued in 1973 when the Amsterdam Supreme Court decreed that there was no legal basis for fluoridation.

In the late 1977 the Highland regional council decided that water fluoridation should not be pursued in its region and the operation in Wick, Scotland, which had provided fluoridated water since 1969, was discontinued in 1979 to bring it into line with the rest of the region.

Water fluoridation was introduced in Chile in 1968 but was discontinued in 1975 partly because of adverse publicity at the time, and partly due to costs. It is understood that fluoridation has since been re-introduced in that country.

Information on the position in other countries is not held.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has made of dental fluorosis; what evidence it has received on whether fluoridation of the water supplies has had any harmful effect on those consuming fluoridated water and, in particular, on children; and if he will now reconsider his advice to local and water authorities on the subject.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has not carried out any studies on dental fluorosis, but a study by Levine et al; (British Dental Journal 1989; 166/249), confirmed that although significantly more children had higher levels of enamel fluorosis in fluoridated areas the levels were not aesthetically unacceptable.

The Government remain of the opinion that the fluoridation of water constitutes a safe and effective means of reducing tooth decay. We will of course continue to monitor any relevant evidence on the safety and effectiveness of fluoridation and will bring any significant new developments to the attention of health authorities.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for a new contract for general practitioners if the medical profession do not accept the agreement reached between him and their negotiators on 4 May.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The agreement was a package deal, and it involved a good deal of compromise by both parties. It is for the profession to decide whether or not to endorse the agreement reached by their negotiators. But if they do not, I would feel bound to ensure that the Government's objectives were still achieved. I would therefore have to re-examine the various elements of the agreement before laying regulations before Parliament and determining the contents of the statement of fees and allowances. Between them these documents will secure better services for patients, relate pay to performance (ensuring that capitation-based payments account for 60 per cent. of the total) and achieve a more cost-effective contract.

Soviet Union (Disaster)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what medical help the Government are providing for the victims of the oil gas pipeline-train disaster in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British Government have both offered, and responded to requests for assistance from the Soviet Union. We have already dispatched £64,000 worth of medical equipment.

In addition, an official request was received yesterday from the Soviet embassy in London and the Soviet Ministry of Health for a team of British specialists to fly out to the Soviet Union to advise and help with the treatment of the patients.

A British team of three burns and plastic surgery specialists, together with a renal dialysis expert, a nurse and technician with dialysis equipment is on its way today to the Soviet Union.

We have offered to take a number of burns cases, but no request has so far been received from the Soviet authorities. Voluntary organisations in Britain are also offering their assistance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Budgeting Loans and Community Care Grants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amounts and what percentages of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for each of the three offices serving the Leyton constituency for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates based on the data on client groups for the period June 1988 to March 1989 are shown in the table. The totals of the amounts awarded are provisional estimates for 1988-89.

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the social fund monthly budget profiles in respect of loans and grants as a percentage of the total annual budget in respect of his local offices at Eston, Hartlepool, Middlesborough and Stockton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details showing the monthly anticipated level of expenditure for the period April 1989 to March 1990 as a percentage of the total annual budget for each of the offices are given in the table.

Details of the national anticipated level of expenditure are available in the Library.

Benefits Claimants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table showing (a) the numbers of claimants of all supplementary benefits, (b) the numbers of claimants of supplementary pensions, (c) the numbers of claimants of supplementary allowances and (d) the numbers of claimants of supplementary benefits required to be available for work, in respect of his Department's local offices at Eston, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Redcar and Stockton each April 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985 and 1987;

(2) if he will publish a table showing (a) the total numbers of claimants receiving income support, (b) claimants of income support receiving pensioner premiums and (c) the number of claimants of income support required to be available for work, in respect of his Department's local offices at Eston, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Redcar and Stockton each April in 1988 and 1989.

Family Income Supplement

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish information relating to the estimated numbers of claimants of family income supplement in Cleveland in 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985 and 1987, along with any estimates of families entitled to but not claiming family income supplement in Cleveland during those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not collect such information on a local basis.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what documentation and advice has been recently sent to adjudicators and members of the immigration appeals tribunal by the Lord Chancellor's Department or any other branch of the Laws Officers Departments arising from judgments on cases involving marriage; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor acts as solicitor to the independent immigration appellate authorities established under the Immigration Act 1971 and represents the immigration appeal tribunal when its decisions are challenged on judicial review.

In December 1988 the Treasury Solicitor so acted for the immigration appeal tribunal in a case, R. v Immigration Appeal Tribunal ex parte Mohammed Khatab, in which the decision of the tribunal refusing the applicant leave to appeal to the tribunal from a decision of an adjudicator was quashed by Mr. Justice Henry. The transcript of the judgment was received at the end of January 1989 and on 6 February the Treasury Solicitor wrote to the president of the tribunal enclosing a copy of the judgment pointing out its importance, and suggesting that it be drawn to the attention of the adjudicators. The Treasury Solicitor did not suggest that any document other than the transcript be circulated and took no steps to secure any such further circulation. It is the Treasury Solicitor's standard practice after any judicial review proceedings to report back to the client, which in this case was the tribunal, with a note of the decision and its implications for the client. In tendering any such advice the Treasury Solicitor acts independently as a solicitor giving advice to a client.

On 7 March the chief adjudicator wrote to all adjudicators enclosing two documents: a copy of the Treasury Solicitor's letter dated 6 February (already referred to) and a copy of standard briefing material prepared by the Treasury Solicitor in December 1988 to be supplied to counsel for the tribunal on applications for judicial review. This briefing material had been sent to the president of the tribunal at an earlier date for information.

Consultations about the role of the tribunal in judicial review proceedings have been going on for some time following an initiative by the Treasury Solicitor's department in 1988, and it has now been agreed that the immigration appeal tribunal should no longer be represented in judicial review proceedings; in future, the Secretary of State or the immigration service will be the respondents in all such cases. Consequently it will no longer be necessary for the Treasury Solicitor to advise the tribunal on the outcome of judicial review proceedings.

Endangered Species

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will have inquires made into the background to the recent proceedings involving endangered species legislation and consider the implications of the judge's comments.

The Attorney-General: This would not be an appropriate course of action for the Lord Chancellor to take.

DEFENCE

Front Line Forces

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the defence implications of the Soviet proposal to thin out front line forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Reductions in the Warsaw pact's massive concentrations of forces in Europe would be very welcome. However, their current zonal proposals would make it very difficult to sustain NATO's strategy of forward defence. Nevertheless, we are studying them with care.

Main Battle Tank (Equipment)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent in the delay of the contract awarded to AVIMO for the procurement of the TOGS sighting system for main battle tanks; and if any penalty clauses have been put into operation.

Mr. Sainsbury: Deliveries are some months behind schedule and we shall be seeking redress under the terms of the contract.

Schools (Approval)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many schools have been removed from the list of those approved for the education of service personnel on his Department's grant within the last five years; and if he will give reasons for these decisions in each case;

(2) how often officials from his Department visit independent schools where children of service personnel are educated with the assistance of his Department's grants; what criteria are used before including such a school on the approved list; how often further visits are made to ensure the school is providing a proper academic education and the right moral and social guidance; and what store is placed on the result of any of Her Majesty's inspectors reports on such schools;

(3) what steps his Department takes to satisfy itself that a private school is a fit place for the children of service men to be sent under grant; how many schools are on the approved list; and if he will list them.

Mr. Neubert: Boarding school allowance is payable to service parents who are eligible for all schools which are registered with the Department of Education and which offer a standard of education which is comparable to that obtainable within the state system. In addition, the school authority or local education authority must manage, control and wholly maintain the boarding facilities.

Although the Ministry of Defence maintains an internal record of those boarding schools which parents are currently using, and which satisfy the above criteria, this is not a comprehensive list of approved schools for BSA purposes. All schools which satisfy the basic criteria may qualify for BSA. Schools fail to qualify for BSA purposes only if they no longer meet the criteria or when they close. There is no centrally kept record of the changes in the pattern of usage over the last five years but indications are that these would have been almost entirely as a result of schools closing or ceasing to offer the necessary general education, or, conversely, as a result of the appearance of newly established or expanded schools. The choice of a particular school is a matter for the parents. However, the Service Children's Education Authority will on request assist parents in making their decisions. The SCEA visits many boarding schools on an ad hoc basis in order to be able to advise parents on matters of school facilities and curriculum. In giving such advice SCEA also takes account of any relevant Her Majesty's inspector's reports. Alternatively, service parents like any others are free to consult local education authorities, ISIS or any other appropriate advisory body.

ENVIRONMENT

Ordnance Survey (Outdoor Leisure Maps)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what plans the Ordnance Survey has (a) to extend the outdoor leisure map series, (b) to issue a second series of outdoor leisure map of Snowdonia, Conwy valley and (c) to use water resistant paper for any other sheets in the series beyond the one for Ben Nevis.

Mr. Ridley: Ordnance Survey is continually reviewing its range of maps and services to ensure that the needs of the market are met within the resources available and that the required return on investment is achieved. The outdoor leisure map series is no exception to this and any change in specification on coverage will be dictated by these marketing principles.

At the moment there are no firm plans to extend the range of outdoor leisure maps but a number of new opportunities are under active consideration. These include the option for publication of a combined Snowdon-Conwy valley map and publishing more Mountainmaster maps of popular climbing areas.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: This depends upon the matter under discussion.

Endangered Species

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to strengthen the law and penalties relating to trade in endangered species following the United Kingdom's first case under the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Trade in endangered species is already strictly controlled within the United Kingdom under EC Regulations 3626/82 and 3418/83, which implement the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora throughout the European Community. Adequate provisions for enforcing the EC regulations already exist under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 and The Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 1155). There have been many prosecutions for import-export offences under the 1979 Act, most of which have been successful.

Orchids

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to protect rare species of orchids from extinction by smuggling activities based in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department complies fully with the requirements of EC Regulations (3626/82 and 3418/83) implementing the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora within the United Kingdom when considering applications for import/export permits. Enforcement of the import/export controls at the points of entry is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what international co-operation exists between Governments on the protection of endangered species of orchids; and what steps he is taking to improve this.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: International trade in orchids is strictly controlled under the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora, to which the United Kingdom and over 100 other countries are party. The EC Regulations (3626/82 and 3418/83) implementing CITES within the European Community already impose more stringent controls on many species of orchids than the convention requires.

Green Belt

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department's advice to local authorities on the provision of low cost housing in rural areas is related to such areas located within the green belt.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 May 1989]: My February statement on 3 February at column 433 did not alter the general presumption against inappropriate development in the green belts. Green belt policy remains as stated in planning policy guidance note 2.

Most green belt areas are by their nature close to the main conurbations, and conditions are not typical of the generality of rural areas to which the statement was addressed. Special considerations may, however, arise in some of the more extensive areas of green belt away from the urban fringe, particularly in areas where there are many small settlements and it may not be practicable or appropriate to define green belt boundaries around each one.

In some of these areas local planning policies already recognise that very limited development within existing settlements may be acceptable and consistent with the function of the green belt. It is for local planning authorities to judge whether low-cost housing development for local community needs would fall within the scope of such policies.

The release, exceptionally, for small-scale, low-cost housing schemes of other sites, within existing settlements which would not normally be considered for development under such policies would again be a matter for the judgment of the planning authority, having regard to all material considerations, including the objectives of green belt policy and the evidence of local need. As I made clear in my previous statement, where sites are released for low cost housing as an exception to normal policies of restraint, it will be essential for the planning authority to satisfy itself as to the adequacy of arrangements to reserve the housing in question for local needs, both initially and on subsequent change of occupant.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar (Incident)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on statements made by Spanish Government officials concerning conflicts between British and Spanish police accounts of circumstances surrounding the Gibraltar shootings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Spanish Government have assured us that the only authentic account by a Spanish official of the events in question is that of Inspector Rayo of 8 August 1988, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House of Commons on 9 May. No other statement by an official has any validity.

Soviet Union

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about relationships between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the last four years there has been a major improvement in Anglo-Soviet relations. We have developed a worthwhile and substantive high-level political dialogue. Contacts of all sorts have expanded rapidly, helping to break down the barriers of misunderstanding and distrust. But the recent expulsions have shown that there is still a long way to go before our relations with the Soviet Union reach the level of stability and mutual trust to which we aspire.

Consular Assistance (Spain)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens were helped in Spain last year by consular officials.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988, Her Majesty's diplomatic and consular posts in Spain received over 119,000 visitors and received and made over 189,000 telephone calls. A large proportion of the visits and telephone calls were in connection with consular work.

Our records, which do not fully reflect all the assistance given to British citizens, show the following:

	Number
Registrations	17,695
Passports issued	6,728
Passports renewed/exended	1,876
Emergency passports issued	5,619
Thefts reported by Britons	5,061
Births/deaths registered	1,042
Repatriations	26
Official assistance with self-help	695
War Pensioners assisted	232
British prisoners visited at least once	849
Birth/death certificates issued	476

East Germany

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with East Germany.

Mr. Waldegrave: We would like to develop fuller relations with the German Democratic Republic, but this would depend greatly upon progress in that country's fulfilment of its CSCE commitments, particularly on human rights. We shall continue to encourage such progress.

Nelson Mandela

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on any diplomatic efforts his Department are pursuing to secure the release of Nelson Mandela.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to urge the South African Government to release, immediately and unconditionally, Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners.

BBC World Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of funding the British Broadcasting Corporation world service has received in real terms in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Eggar: The total grants-in-aid of the BBC world service in the last 15 years, expressed in cash terms and at 1988-89 prices were as follows:

	Cash terms £ million	1988-89 prices £ million
1975-76	27·1	84·9
1976-77	30·8	85·1
1977-78	34·0	82·7
1978-79	37·2	81·4
1979-80	42·9	80·7
1980-81	54·9	87·1
1981-82	62·8	90·7
1982-83	70·9	95·5
1983-84	77·6	100·0
1984-85	81·0	99·5
1985-86	90·0	104·8
1986-87	98·9	111·4
1987-88	97·9	105·0
1988-89	114·5	114·5
1989-90	[1]120·1	[1]113·9

[1] Estimate.

Note: Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 exclude provision for FCO-BBC relay stations contract previously funded separately from grants-in-aid: £5·6 million in 1988-89, £5·9 million in 1989-90.

Egypt

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any reports of human rights violations by law enforcement officials in Egypt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are aware of the allegations in Amnesty International's recent report; and are naturally concerned at any alleged abuses of human rights, wherever they occur.

Nuclear Arms

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the proliferation of ballistic missiles in Third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We believe that the proliferation of ballistic missiles in Third world countries can have a seriously destabilising effect, particularly in areas of regional tension. As a founder member of the missile technology control region (MTCR), we have adopted guidelines to control the transfer of equipment and technology. When the MTCR was established in April 1987, the partners urged all states to adopt the guidelines of the regime.

Iran

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will express sympathy to the people of Iran on the death of their nation's spiritual leader; and if Her Majesty's Government sought to be represented at the funeral.

Mr. Waldegrave: No, in both cases.

China

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will protest to the Government of China about the killing of civilians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State made in the House on 6 June about developments in China.

Katyn Massacre

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will initiate talks with Polish and Soviet Governments on the Katyn massacre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We see no need to initiate talks. We are following developments closely. We urge the Soviet Union to help establish the facts.

British Travellers Abroad

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what services are made available by his Department to British travellers abroad.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassies, high commissions and consulates around the world make available a range of statutory and non-statutory consular services to British travellers. Statutory functions include:

- the registration of births and deaths
- the solemnisation and registration of marriages
- the performance of notarial acts
- the servicing of documents and taking of evidence
- duties under the Merchant Shipping Acts.

Non-Statutory functions include:

- the protection of British nationals and British institutions, including assistance in cases of death, illness, arrest, proposed deportation, etc.
- the relief and repatriation of distressed British nationals, as a last resort
- the maintenance of close and good relations with the British community
- the issue of passports.

Lee Chuk Yan

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government about the detention of Lee Chuk Yan.

Mr. Eggar: Following Lee Chuk Yan's detention by police at Peking airport on 5 June, our embassy in Peking lodged an immediate inquiry with the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs and made considerable efforts to trace his whereabouts. The embassy subsequently established that he was unharmed in a hotel room in Peking and kept in close contact with him. We have now had confirmation that Lee Chuk Yan was evacuated safely from Peking on 8 June.

Members of Parliament (Blackmail)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what criteria he selected (a) the means and (b) the timing to let it be known that the possible blackmail of hon. Members had not been in any way associated with the recent expulsion of Soviet citizens.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The story appeared in newspapers on Friday 26 May. The Leader of the Opposition wrote to me on 26 May to seek a statement of the Government's views. I replied on 26 May, making clear that I should have no objection if the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) wished to publish our exchange. He did so on 27 May.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent statements were made by the Minister of State in his Department, the hon. Member for Bristol West (Mr. Waldegrave) to a BBC correspondent regarding possible blackmail of hon. Members by Soviet agents; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have nothing to add to the statement issued by my hon. Friend on 2 June.

Eastern Europe and Soviet Union

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to respond to the report of the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs on Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's response to the Select Committee report was published today in the form of a Command Paper.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 12 June 1989

PRIME MINISTER

War Widows' Pensions

Sir George Young: To ask the Prime Minister whether the arrangements for disregarding war widows' pensions for housing benefit purposes are the same in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: No. The housing benefit scheme for England, Scotland and Wales has a statutory disregard, currently set at £5 a week, of any war disablement or war widow's pension, and local authorities have discretion to enhance this disregard. The separate housing benefit scheme in Northern Ireland has a statutory disregard of all such pensions.

Electoral Register (Publicity)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister in the period of her premiership for which the latest figures are available, what percentage of Government expenditure on publicity has been spent to encourage people to register to vote.

The Prime Minister: Total expenditure over this period on Government publicity to encourage people to register to vote could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure on electoral registration advertising as a percentage of all Government advertising has been as follows:

Year	Percent	Year	Percent
1979-80	[1]n.a.	1984-85	0·57
1980-81	0·03	1985-86	0·59
1981-82	[1]n.a.	1986-87	0·30
1982-83	0·46	1987-88	0·29

ENERGY

World Association of Nuclear Operators

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has placed any restrictions on any category of information that may be disclosed by nuclear power station operators to the World Association of Nuclear Operators established in May.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The World Association of Nuclear Operators is an association of nuclear power plant operators established to facilitate the exchange of information relating purely to nuclear power plant safety. The United Kingdom's members are free to exchange such information.

Magnox Power Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list how many natural circulation tests have been carried out in the United Kingdom's Magnox nuclear power stations giving their locations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board, and British Nuclear Fuels plc. They are responsible for the operation of Magnox power stations in England and Wales. I will ask their respective chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the Central Electricity Generating Board has indicated to him how it intends to deal with the Wigner energy problem at Berkeley nuclear power station now that both reactors have been closed down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the CEGB that Wigner energy does not present a problem in the decommissioning of Berkeley power station. The board will have to satisfy the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate before undertaking each stage of decommissioning.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the Central Electricity Generating Board has any plans to carry out natural circulation tests at any of the operational Magnox power stations to further research into understanding the Wigner energy problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that natural circulation tests on nuclear plant have no connection with research into understanding the Wigner energy phenomenon. Any natural circulation tests would be subject to the agreement of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Disabled People (Electricity Supply)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will bring forward provisions in the Electricity Bill to enable electricity meters to be repositioned so that they are accessible for disabled people and to ensure that any charges for this service will be borne by the supplier;

(2) what provision he is proposing for the Electricity Bill to enable electricity meters to be adapted for use by disabled people;

(3) what provision he is proposing for the Electricity Bill to enable electricity meters to be installed in places that are accessible for disabled people.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The draft public electricity supply licence requires the licensee to produce a code of practice specifically aimed at the elderly and disabled. This code would cover special services available to these groups including such matters as the provision of special controls and adaptors for electrical appliances and meters and the placement of meters for convenient access. Where a meter is repositioned, the supplier would have the right to recover from the consumer any costs reasonably incurred. Community care grants are available from the social fund to those in receipt of income support to help with the cost of resiting meters to allow disabled people easier access.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provision he is proposing for the Electricity Bill to protect disabled people on life support systems from disconnection.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The electricity industry currently operates a voluntary code of practice which offers a number of protections against disconnection for consumers in difficulty, and makes special provision for the blind, severely sick and the disabled. The draft public electricity supply licence requires the licensee to produce a similar code to ensure that this approach continues after privatisation.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how much of the tonnage of rock likely to be required for a Severn tidal barrage will come from the limestone quarries of the Mendips and south Wales; whether studies are proceeding as to the likely social effects of such quarrying; and whether studies are proceeding as to the likely effects of such quarrying on road and rail links;

(2) what are his latest estimates of the overall capital cost of a Severn tidal barrage at current prices;

(3) what assessment he has made of the implications of electricity privatisation on (a) the programme studies into the effect of the proposed Severn tidal barrage, (b) the consideration in committee of these studies, (c) consultation with the public and (d) the consultation process with the European Community;

(4) what substantive decisions have been made with regard to a Severn tidal barrage since November 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(5) when he expects the results of the further studies into the feasibility of a Severn tidal barrage to be available; and what form their publication will take;

(6) whether longer-term studies into potential damage to sensitive wildfowl species including wildlife and waders arising from the building of the proposed Severn tidal barrage will be undertaken before a decision is reached on the building of the barrage;

(7) which organisations will be represented on the committee to evaluate the information generated by the studies into a Severn tidal barrage; who will be the members; how significant environmental interests will be represented; and how regional industrial and service interests will be represented.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Studies of a Severn tidal energy barrage are nearing completion and I expect to receive a report in the next few months. A summary document of the work will be published in the energy paper series, and supporting reports by the Severn tidal power group will also be published. It is premature at this stage for me to comment on the results of the study or any further work which may be necessary. Whilst the current work includes a study of regional aspects of the barrage project, financial and related issues will be examined in the time-scale of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department's contacts with journalists are based on requests for information from the media generally, and on regular contact with relevant specialist correspondents. My Department has contact also with a wider spectrum of newspapers, broadcasting organisations, and specialist journals, as appropriate.

Eastern Electricity Board

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the representations he has received regarding alleged anti-competitive practices by the Eastern electricity board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has received two such representations.

Electricity Boards

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he intends to take regarding cross-subsidisation by the electricity boards of electricity supply through retail promotion.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The public electricity supply licence, which, subject to passage of the Electricity Bill, will be granted to the successors of the area boards, will prohibit cross subsidies between a licensee's separate businesses.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what investigations he has conducted into the retail promotion activities of electricity boards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigated and reported (Cmnd. 8812) on the direction and management by the London electricity board of its business of retailing domestic electrical goods, spare parts and ancillary goods. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission also considered retailing activities in its reports on some other area boards.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made regarding proposals for the application off shore of regulations dealing with safety representatives and safety committees.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to the reply, 31 January 1989, c. 156]: I have today laid before each House the Offshore Installations (Safety Representatives and Safety Committees) Regulations 1989.

Prior to the making of these regulations extensive consultations were carried out with organisations representing those persons likely to be affected by them including Government bodies, employers and trade unions. They have been made on the advice of the Health and Safety Commission under the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971. The effect of the regulations will be that every offshore worker, including contractors' employees, can make a positive contribution to promoting health and safety on offshore installations through elected safety representatives and safety committees.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

St. Benedict's School, Birkenhead

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was allotted for internal redecoration when approving the new St. Benedict's school in Birkenhead.

Mr. Butcher: The proposal to establish St. Benedict's school was approved by the Secretary of State on 2 April 1987. The total cost of the building project to extend and adapt the school premises is £1·8 million. A total of £1·4 million of this will be met by the governors, who will receive 85 per cent. grant from the Department on that expenditure. The local education authority intends to meet the remaining costs of approximately £400,000, including the cost of necessary internal redecoration, and this was taken into account in determining its prescribed capital expenditure allocation for 1989-90.

Student Loans

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Official Report a full account of the objections to his proposals for student loans from banks.

Mr. Jackson: The White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" (Cm 520) contained, in annex G, a discussion of possible objections which had been expressed in evidence to the review of student support. The potential participation by the banks and other financial institutions in the administration of the scheme is under consideration; my right hon. Friend will announce his conclusions in due course.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated cost to public funds over the next 10 years of his proposals for student loans.

Mr. Jackson: The estimated costs to public funds of the Government's proposals of top-up loans were set out in annex E of the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" (Cm 520). That estimate excluded administrative costs, which have yet to be determined.

Special Needs

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to provide the extra specialist training and resources necessary to enable children with special needs to have access to the national curriculum.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong) on 15 May at column 2 and the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) on 6 June at column 16.

Under-fives (Curriculum)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will appoint a nursery teacher to the group examining a curriculum for the under-fives, chaired by the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold).

Mrs. Rumbold: Miss L. M. Grundy, the head teacher of Grandpont nursery school, Oxford, has been appointed to serve on the committee.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his proposals for the restoration of collective bargaining for the determination of teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on Tuesday 6 June at column 14.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give the total numbers of staff employed by the Crown Prosecution Service in the year prior to the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, and for each subsequent year stating whether such staff are qualified or unqualified; and if he will give also (a) the number of cases reviewed and (b) the number of cases conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service in each such year.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service did not employ any staff prior to its formation on 1 April 1986. The total numbers of staff employed by the Crown Prosecution Service since April 1986 are:

	Total staff	Total lawyers included
1 April 1986	1,360	585
1 April 1987	3,374	1,245
1 April 1988	3,864	1,311
1 April 1989	4,322	1,398

The figures for the year of its formation reflect the fact that until 1 October 1986 the service was established only in the metropolitan counties excluding Greater London; elsewhere it operated in parallel with county prosecuting solicitors' departments. In addition to the lawyers in post on 1 April 1989, 133 unestablished lawyers were also employed, reducing the shortfall to 261 or 15 per cent.

The Crown Prosecution Service does not collect statistics on the number of cases received or conducted, but does collect statistics on the number of defendants. The available figures, based on the number of defendants, are:

	Received by Crown Prosecution Service	Prosecuted in Magistrates Courts	Prosecuted in Crown Courts
1 October 1986-31 March 1987	824,000	611,000	40,000
1 April 1987-31 March 1988	1,548,000	1,335,000	135,000
1 April 1988-31 March 1989	1,574,000	1,328,000	143,000

NATIONAL FINANCE

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Brooke: There are no formal guidelines. It depends on the matter under discussion.

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to make any arrangements in order to enable those married couples who wish to share the benefits of the married couple's allowance equally between them from 1990 to do so.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. The married couple's allowance which will be introduced under independent taxation in April 1990 will be given in the first instance to the husband. If he has insufficient income to use part or all of the allowance himself he will be able to transfer the surplus to his wife. Allowing married couples generally to share the married couple's allowance between them would add considerably to the complexity of independent taxation and would delay its introduction. Fewer than one in 300 couples would gain any financial advantage from this additional complexity.

Fishing Licences

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any intention of levying value added tax on angling rod licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Fishing licences, which are issued by water authorities, are not liable to VAT. It is proposed that the National Rivers Authority will take over responsibility for the issue of these licences. Their correct VAT treatment, when this happens, is currently being discussed by Customs and Excise, the Department of the Environment and MAFF.

Taxation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was accrued to the Exchequer from Wales, for the last year for which figures are available in (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) value added tax and (d) Customs and Excise duty.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information is available only in respect of income tax.

In 1986-87, the income tax liabilities of residents of Wales were estimated to be about £1,500 million.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will obtain a copy in English for his departmental library of the speech by Commissioner Scrivener with regard to the harmonisation of value added tax.

Mr. Lilley: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Commissioner Scrivener's draft communication to the Council of 17 May. I am making arrangements for the final English version of the communication to be placed in the House Library as soon as it is available.

Inflation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has in respect of the figures given by him to the House on 7 June of comparative inflation rates in the United Kingdom and in Italy on the precise components in each of the two calculations of housing costs.

Mr. Lilley: The inflation rate given for the United Kingdom was for the increase over the year to April in the all items RPI excluding mortgage interest payments. In the quoted Italian index of consumer prices owner-occupier housing costs are not included.

ECOFIN Meeting (S'Agaro)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the conclusions reached at the recent ECOFIN meeting at S'Agaro.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 6 June 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer attended the informal meeting of European Community Finance Ministers in S'Agaro, Spain on 19 to 21 May. Ministers examined the report on economic and monetary union in the European Community as requested by the European Council at its meeting on 27 and 28 June 1988. It was not the intention of the discussion to reach conclusions. Ministers also had a further discussion of the approximation of indirect taxation and of proposals on taxation of savings including mutual assistance, which will be discussed again at a future ECOFIN Council.

Deeds of Covenant

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of accepting, as effective, non-charitable deeds of covenant executed prior to 15 March 1988, but not notified to the Inland Revenue before 30 June 1988, for which repayments have been made in respect of convenanted payments due prior to 15 March 1988;

(2) in respect of how many deeds of covenant executed prior to 15 March 1988, but not notified to the Inland Revenue before 30 June 1988, a repayment has been made in respect of a covenant payment due before 15 March 1988;

(3) what information he has regarding the number of non-charitable deeds of covenant executed prior to March 15 1988 but not notified to the Inland Revenue before 30 June 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 June 1989]: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

India and Nepal

46. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any proposals to increase funding for population-related projects in India and Nepal.

Mr. Chris Patten: We hope to discuss with the Government of India in the next few months what further help we can give to supplement the substantial family planning assistance being provided through our primary health and slum improvement projects. There will be a family planning component in the primary health care project we are preparing in eastern Nepal.

Overseas Charities

47. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any representations about his Department's support for charities overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I regularly meet representatives of many of the British non-governmental organisations. My Department has a productive relationship with them; and they play a distinct and valuable role in developing countries.

I have increased substantially the money allocated for jointly funded development projects and for British volunteers overseas. In 1987-88 aid expenditure of all kinds through British non-governmental organisations exceeded £42 million.

Zimbabwe

52. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the level of British aid to Zimbabwe.

Mr. Chris Patten: Zimbabwe is an important recipent of British aid. We have provided over £200 million in development assistance since independence. In recent months, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has pledged a further £25 million in capital aid for agreed development projects.

Aid Projects

53. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials in his Department dealt with how many aid projects (a) in the past year and (b) 10 years ago; what was the cost of the project in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information in respect of individual projects could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but in 1978 gross expenditure on aid was £752 million and the number of officials employed in the headquarters of the Overseas Development Administration (as at 1 April) was 1,411. In 1988 the equivalent figures were £1,637 million and 1,196 officials.

Aid

54. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the combined percentage of gross national products given in overseas aid by members of the development committee of the OECD, except the United Kingdom, in 1988 or the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, the combined percentage of GNP devoted to official development assistance by development assistance committee members of the OECD, excluding the United Kingdom, was 0·35 per cent.

56. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the development assistance committee of the OECD will next review the United Kingdom aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: The next review is scheduled for 1991.

58. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of gross national product was given in overseas aid by the United Kingdom Government in 1988.

59. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of gross national product was given in overseas aid by the United Kingdom Government in 1988.

Mr. Chris Patten: Net official development assistance as a proportion of gross national product is estimated at 0·32 per cent. in 1988.

61. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of public expenditure was devoted to overseas aid in 1979 and in 1988 or the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Net public expenditure on overseas aid as a percentage of general Government expenditure was 1·01 per cent. in 1979 and is estimated at 0·85 per cent. in 1988.

Lesotho

55. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to Lesotho.

Mr. Chris Patten: Lesotho has long been an important recipient of British development assistance. Gross bilateral aid disbursements are estimated at almost £5 million in 1988.

In October 1988 we offered a new grant of £10 million for expenditure on agreed development projects over the next few years.

Aid Linkage

57. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the linkage of aid and other deals.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Kingdom aid is provided in support of sustainable development and to alleviate poverty in developing countries. There is no question of linking aid and "deals".

US Treasury Secretary

60. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the United States Treasury Secretary; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Chris Patten: Both the United States Treasury Secretary and my right hon. and learned Friend will be at the economic summit in Paris on 14 to 16 July. The summit will be an opportunity to discuss a number of important economic issues.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consequences have flowed from the meetings held by officials of the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) with Megadon and Pa-ikan Amer-Indian chiefs from the rain forest.

Mr. Chris Patten: At my meeting on 28 April with Chief Raoni, Chief Payakan and representatives of the Rainforest Foundation, I invited the Rainforest Foundation to apply for joint funding by the Overseas Development Administration of a project to enforce demarcation of the protected area of the rain forest. When a proposal comes forward, I shall consider it sympathetically.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to halt the destruction of tropical rain forests; and what he is doing to promote the concept of sustainable yield in timber management in tropical rain forests.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration is implementing a forestry initiative aimed at increasing our aid for the sector in an effort to combat forest destruction. We are using the aid programme to promote the concept of sustainable yield in timber management, for example through a £3·7 million forestry inventory and management project in Ghana. We also promote the concept through participation in tropical forestry action plan sector reviews and in the International Tropical Timber Organisation. The recent sixth session of the ITTO council decided to request the executive director to propose ways of implementing policies to promote sustainable management of natural forests and woodlands.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Search Operation, Ards Peninsula

62. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what firearms and explosives were recovered at the home of a member of the Territorial Army in a search operation in the Ards peninsula, Co. Down, in February; what action has been taken against the person and any associates who are members of the Territoral Army; and whether effective security measures are now in place to guard against the activities of Loyalist paramilitary groups or their sympathisers in the Territorial Army.

Mr. Ian Stewart: On 24 February, six hand grenades, three handguns and a quantity of ammunition were recovered at the home of a member of the Territorial Army, following an RUC search operation in the Ards peninsula. The individual concerned has been charged with firearms and explosives offences and is now in custody. He has been discharged from the Territorial Army.

No other present of former member of the Territorial Army has been charged by the police following his arrest. Questions about the Territorial Army in Northern Ireland (which has no security role in the Province) are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Short Bros.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, in the heads of agreement for the sale of Short Brothers plc to Bombardier, what commitments there are in relation to the Shorts plants in Newtownards; and if he will make a statement on the future of Shorts in Newtownards.

Mr. Viggers: The heads of agreement are commercially confidential. However, in its public statements Bombardier has made it clear that assurances have been given that the manufacturing, and R and D facilities of Shorts, as well as the company headquarters, will remain in Northern Ireland. While the company has not made specific reference to any single manufacturing operation it has, nevertheless indicated that it plans to examine the potential for expansion for all areas of the business.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show how many (a) handguns, (b) shotguns, (c) semi-automatic and fully-automatic rifles, (d) machine guns, (e) ammunition and (f) explosives by weight have been recovered from the possession of terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland in each year since 1976 to the latest available date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 23 March 1989]: Such information as is readily available is contained in the following tables. The tables relate to the number of munitions found by the security forces during the period 1976 to 30 April 1989:

HEALTH

Prescription Payments

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost of the available scale margin with respect to prescription payments in the last year of its existence;

(2) how much money has been saved by the abolition of the available scale margin;

(3) on how many occasions were available scale margin payments made during the last year of that payment's existence.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the hon. Member's questions relate to the tolerance margin which was included in the assessment of claimants' requirements under the scheme for claiming exemption from prescription charges on low income grounds which was in force prior to 11 April 1988. I regret that we have no information about the number of cases in which the existence of this margin affected a claimant's entitlement to exemption from prescription charges; nor is it possible to distinguish between the effects of the abolition of the tolerance margin and those of the other changes which took place at the same time.

NHS Reform

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he proposes to ensure that self-governing hospitals offer a full range of services to their local community.

Mr. Mellor: District health authorities will continue to be responsible for ensuring that a comprehensive range of health care services is available to their residents through contracts placed with self-governing or directly managed NHS hospitals or the private sector.

Midwives

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he expects to respond to the recommendations of the Social Services Select Committee report on midwives' regrading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) and my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 10 May 1989, at columns 450-51.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Mellor: This depends upon the matter under discussion.

Nurses (Regrading)

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library all instructions he and his officials have issued to regional and district health authorities in connection with the nurses' regrading scheme.

Mr. Mellor: Copies of the guidance issued are in the Library.

Medical Education and Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the specific studies made by his Department regarding the financial and regional requirements for (a) staff time and attention, (b) hospital beds, (c) laboratory monitoring, (d) extra out-patient attention, (e) resources for epidemiological controls and care and (f) other medical services demanded by medical research in the United Kingdom, during the next 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has not undertaken any such specific studies.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the specific funds to be allocated for medical (a) education and (b) research for each of the next five years.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibilities for the funding of medical education and research are vested in a number of bodies. We intend to ensure, through an appropriate funding mechanism, that hospitals which incur extra costs in future through their support of teaching and research, are not put at a disadvantage by comparison with others.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the proposals contained in the White Paper, "Working for Patients", will avoid the fragmentation of medical research and making the dissemination of the application of research results throughout the country more difficult.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have stated in their White Paper "Working for Patients" that they are firmly committed to maintaining the quality of research in the NHS. A range of measures will be taken to fulfil this pledge. These include the necessary legislative framework, provision for the service costs of research, and accommodation in the merit award system for consultants engaged in research.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he responded to the comments and observations made by the Medical Research Council to his White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Freeman: A response to the comments and observations of the Medical Research Council will be made in due course. Officials have discussed these matters with the Medical Research Council and these contacts will be maintained.

Rejected Imported Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 26 May, Official Report, column 788, he will list the whereabouts of records of rejected imported food consignments.

Mr. Freeman: This information is held by the port health authority of the port of importation.

Chlorinated Water

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath what information his Department has on the effects of drinking chlorinated water.

Mr. Freeman: Nearly all public water supplies in England and Wales are treated with chlorine by the water undertakers in order to kill pathogenic micro-organisms. This leads to the production of chlorination by-products, at a level of a few parts per billion. Some of the chemicals formed cause cancer when administered in large doses for long periods to laboratory animals.

The Government sought advice from the Department of Health's independent expert advisory committee on medical aspects of the contamination of air, soil and water. It said:

"We have found no sound reason to conclude that the consumption of the by-products of chlorination, in drinking water which has been treated and chlorinated according to current practices, increases the risk of cancer in humans.

The effective disinfection of water supplies is clearly of great importance in maintaining public health. In our opinion, modification of chlorination processes which have proved effective over many years, or the replacement of chlorination by other disinfectants, is not required by the available data on cancer epidemiology, animal carcinogenicity, and mutagenicity in relation to chlorination by-products in drinking water."

This advice was conveyed to water authorities and water companies in England and Wales in the Department of the Environment/Welsh Office letter WP 12/1986.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to ensure that opted-out hospitals under his proposals for reform of the National Health Service will finance the necessary care of brain dead organ donors prior to transplant operations including heart-lung transplants for cystic fibrosis patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are awaiting the report of a study, commissioned by the Department of the costs incurred by hospitals which provide donor organs for transplant. We shall be examining future financial arrangements in the light of the results of this study.

NHS (Pay and Prices)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1979 (a) the assumed movement of National Health Service pay and prices for the following financial year at the time of the publication of the public expenditure White Paper and (b) the actual movement of National Health Service pay and prices over that year; and if he will give the scale of cash uplift and efficiency savings required to cover (i) the assumed inflation rate and (ii) the actual inflation rate in each year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available. NHS expenditure plans are made in cash and the Department does not produce projections of a price index for its aggregate programme. Generally, when measuring the effects of inflation on NHS expenditure, the GDP deflator is used as this gives the best picture of the costs of the resources spent on the NHS to the economy as a whole. By this measure gross expenditure on the NHS has increased by more than 40 per cent. over and above retail price inflation since 1978-79, or an average of over 3 per cent. a year. In addition to these extra funds, the Health Service has also benefited from the effects of health authorities' cost improvement programmes.

NHS Review

Mr. Frank Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment has been made by (a) his Department and (b) the Central Office of Information of the National Health Service review launch in early 1989;

(2) what is the estimated cost of the campaign to promote the National Health Service review relaunched on 7 June; and how those cost are made up;

(3) which agency or agencies were involved in the relaunch of the National Health Service review publicity campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The NHS review launch in early 1989 achieved its objectives of informing the public in general and NHS staff in particular about the Government's proposals. The Central Office of Information was not involved in this communications exercise.

There has been no relaunch of the White Paper proposals.

The second stage of the communication effort will provide information for staff at hospitals and units which have expressed interest in self-governing status and for the general public in the areas concerned.

NML Presentations Ltd has been contracted to provide organisation, production, design and print services in connection with this communication programme.

The cost of this stage of the programme is of the order of £750,000.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the allocation for research into the cause of cot deaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The main Government agency for the promotion of medical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The MRC has funded a number of projects related to sudden infant deaths and respiratory distress in the newborn, details of which were given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 20 February, at columns 524-25. As a matter of urgency, we are discussing with the MRC what further avenues of research might next be most fruitfully pursued.

Air Ambulances

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the cost of air ambulances; and what proposals he has to improve the service.

Mr. Freeman: Emergency flights by the RAF and the air-sea rescue service are undertaken free of charge. The current costs to the NHS of non-emergency flights are £1,015 per flying hour. Several ambulance authorities within the United Kingdom now use dedicated air ambulance helicopters. No information on costs is held centrally, but running costs of the Cornwall service are reported to be around £250,000 per annum.

It is for health authorities to decide whether local circumstances justify the cost of operating a helicopter ambulance.

Blood Transfusions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the shortages of blood for blood transfusion in the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: There was a temporary reduction in blood supplies following the bank holidays. There has been an excellent response from donors, and stock levels are returning to normal.

Childline

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance is provided by his Department to Childline; what training he requires its counsellors to have; and to what extent its action and inquiries are co-ordinated by his Department.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 9 June 1989]: We made a grant of £50,000 towards the launching of Childline in October 1986 and £100,000 for the financial year 1988-89, and we are considering a further application for grant aid. Childline has developed its own training programme, which all its counsellors are required to successfully complete. The Department maintains a close link with Childline and is represented on its council.

Eye Tests

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage fall in the number of people coming forward for routine eye tests since April 1989 in England.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 9 June 1989]: We do not yet have information on the number of people receiving sight tests since April 1989. We expect to commission a survey in the autumn into the number of private sight tests being carried out although the precise details for this survey have yet to be worked out.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Disablement Allowance (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Leicestershire receive severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Scott: The numbers of people receiving severe disablement allowance from the Department's local social security offices in Leicestershire as at 30 April 1989 are as follows:

	Number
Leicester (Burleys Way)	476
Leicester (Lower Hill Street)	1,054
Leicester (Norton Street)	499
Leicester (Yeoman Street)	838
Loughborough	654

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Disabled People

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the allowances paid to disabled people will be increased to take into account the extra expense of the community charge, also known as the poll tax.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All community chargepayers on low income, including those who are disabled, will be helped through the community charge rebate scheme which provides rebates of up to 80 per cent. of liability. The special element built into income-related benefit levels will provide help with the 20 per cent. of liability that all chargepayers will have to make from their own resources.

Benefits

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the grounds of refusal of unemployment-related benefits in a manner consistent with the reports of the chief adjudication officer, and if he will give the number of claims disallowed on each ground in 1988.

Mr Peter Lloyd: The information requested is in the table.

Disallowances of Unemployment-Related Benefits made by Department of Employment Adjudication Officers in 1988

	Numbers

Total disallowances	869,891

Loans and Grants

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of providing the information on budgeting loans and community care grants sought by the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 25 May, column 683; what was the the cost of providing similar information in his answers of 24 May, Official Report, columns 547-52; on what criteria he decided in each case as to whether the cost was disproportionate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The cost of providing the information on budgeting loans and community care grants sought by the hon. Member was approximately £285. Similarly the cost of providing equivalent information in the replies on 24 May was £180 and £112 respectively. There is a long-standing convention that Ministers may decline to answer a question when the cost of preparing the reply is likely to be in excess of £250.

Family Credit (Advertising Campaign)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library any assessment of the family credit advertising campaign of April to June 1988 made (a) by his Department or its predecessor or (b) the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information on the April to June 1988 family credit advertising campaign was provided to those planning and mounting the current family credit publicity campaign.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The advertising agency concerned did not request any specific information relating to the earlier campaign and none was provided.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which agency or agencies were involved in the family credit advertising campaign mounted in April to June 1988; and what fee or fees they received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: One agency, BSB Dorland, was involved in the campaign. It did not receive a specific fee for the campaign. The sums involved are commercial in confidence.

Lodgings

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in local authority supported lodgings in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales lost the £17·50 addition in April when the payment of their benefit was divided between income support and housing benefit; what representations he has received about the removal of this addition; if he intends to review it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: People in supported lodgings should not have seen any reduction in their total benefit income when the new arrangements were introduced in April. Many will have received more benefit overall, because they gained access for the first time to normal income support allowances and premiums which recognise the special needs of the elderly and the disabled. The remainder were entitled to transitional protection which will continue for as long as they remain in supported lodgings.

We have received no recent representations on this issue and have no plans to change the current arrangements.

Income Support

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value of supplementary benefit income support expressed as a proportion of the appropriate level of average net male earnings, in each year since 1974, for each of the following categories of claimants (a) a married couple, plus one child, aged under five years, (b) a married couple, plus two children, aged under five years, and (c) a married couple, plus three children, two aged under five years, and one aged five to 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is at tables 6.4b and 6.5b of the 1988 edition of the "Abstract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits and Contributions", a copy of which is in the Library. These tables do not include information relating to income support in 1988 for families in category (iii), but the figure requested is 51·5 per cent.

The income support and supplementary benefit figures are not strictly comparable as the latter included an allowance for rent.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Capital Sentences (Jamaica)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consideration has been given by the Privy Council to capital sentences passed by Jamaican courts in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The following numbers of appeals and petitions for special leave in capital cases from Jamaica have been referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council since 1980.

	Petitions	Appeals
1981	3	2
1982	3	1
1983	4	0
1985	4	1
1986	8	0
1987	15	1
1989 (to date)	6	2

It would not be appropriate for me to make any statement regarding the exercise of this judicial function.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Stationery

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much House of Commons stationery has been used in each of the last five years; and what was the total cost of such stationery in each of the years for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: The quantity of House of Commons die-stamped stationery which has been ordered by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in each of the last five years, together with the total value, is as follows:

Financial year	Envelopes	Letterheads	Value
1984-85	4,118,000	5,929,000	n/a
1985-86	3,112,000	4,477,000	311,880

1987-88	4,457,000	5,353,000	351,237
1988-89	3,259,000	4,808,000	367,815

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what organisations have been granted ET training agent contracts; what were the planned volumes of trainees between September 1988 and March 1989; what are the planned volumes between April 1989 and August 1989; how many trainees have been referred to ET training agents; and how many action plans had been agreed at the end of each month since September 1988, for each Training Agency area.

Mr. Nicholls: The names and addresses of training agents are in the employment training directory of training agents and training managers, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. Information on the profiles of training agent volumes is for internal management information purposes only. The numbers of employment service referrals to training agents are only available for the 77 employment service areas and are given in table 1. The number of action plans agreed at training agents are given for the 57 Training Agency areas in table 2.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will produce figures showing the duration of stay for participants on employment training on (a) a national and (b) a Merseyside basis.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about duration of stay of employment training participants is not yet available.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there have been any cases where an unemployed claimant has had his benefits or credits stopped for refusing the offer of a place on employment training or for leaving the scheme before completion.

Mr. Lee: I am aware of only one case where an unemployed person had credits withheld because of a refusal to accept employment training. This decision was the result of an administrative error and I am satisfied that the case has now been rectified.

Because employment training is voluntary it is not training approved by the Secretary of State for the purposes of the Social Security Act. The right to unemployment benefit and credits is not, therefore, affected by a refusal of employment training or leaving an employment training course early.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the target numbers of employment training places in September 1988 for the south Tyne and north Tyne areas, for the first year of operation of the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Profiles nationally and for area offices for the numbers of filled employment training places are for internal management purposes only.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider providing gardening assistance for elderly and infirm people under employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training is a training programme designed to meet the needs of individual trainees and to help them get jobs when they finish their training. Gardening training is available where there is a local demand from employers for people with gardening skills and a demand from trainees for this sort of training. In these circumstances, employment training trainees very often provide considerable gardening assistance to elderly and infirm people.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the 50 largest companies participating in the employment training programme, in each case stating the number of places they contracted for, the number of places so far filled, the latter as a percentage of the former and the level of expenditure so far on employment training advertising by each of these companies.

Mr. Nicholls: The table lists the information requested for those companies which have national employment training contracts through the large contractors unit. Other large companies have local contracts. However, for these organisations the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs. There are other large companies who are participating in employment training as placement providers.

Information concerning company expenditure on employment training advertising is the commercial information of the companies involved and thus is unavailable.

It should be noted that several of these companies have only recently signed employment training, training managing contracts and therefore their occupancy figures have not yet built up.

New Businesses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses have started up in each of the last six months for which figures are available, and in the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988; and what estimate he has of the average number of persons employed by each firm.

Mr. Cope: The table gives the date for 1985, 1986 and 1987, the latest year for which figures have been published. Early indications are that the figure for 1988 was greater. Monthly figures are not available. There are no estimates of the numbers employed by these new businesses.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for 12 months or more in the Denton and Reddish constituency.

Mr. Lee: The information is available from the Library. In April 1989 there were, 1,148 claimants who had been unemployed for 12 months or more in the Denton and Reddish parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much long-term unemployment has fallen over the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information is available from the Library. In April 1989, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for one year or more was 744,120 compared with 1,295,146 in April 1987, a fall of 551,026 or 42·6 per cent. The comparison is slightly affected by the change in the count from September 1988 due to new benefit regulations affecting those people aged under 18 years.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many small businesses have been set up since May 1979; and what is his estimate of the number which have survived.

Mr. Cope: During the eight years from the end of 1979 to the end of 1987, there were an estimated 1,416,000 new registrations for VAT. The percentage of new businesses still registered for VAT after two years is estimated to be 74 per cent.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any estimates of the number of jobs created by the factoring business in respect of the role in financing small businesses throughout the United Kingdom; and what advice his Department is able to give to companies seeking guidance on the merits of factoring as distinct from bank loans.

Mr. Cope: We have no estimate of the number of jobs which may have been created or supported by the factoring business. Our small firms service gives advice on all matters affecting small businesses, including where applicable the possibility of factoring. Basic advice on the possibilities of factoring as a method of improving cash flow is also given in the booklet "Prompt Payment Please". The appropriate method of raising finance including factoring, bank loans, or overdrafts, depends on the circumstances of the individual small business.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Cope: This depends on the matter under discussion.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses were established by participants of the enterprise allowance scheme in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. Over 98,500 previously unemployed people set up a business through the enterprise allowance scheme in the year to 31 March 1989. Latest surveys indicate that around 80 per cent. of participants are sole traders, and nearly all others are in partnerships.

Enterprise Allowance (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been in receipt of the enterprise allowance in Northamptonshire in each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Cope: The information is set out in the table. figures for 1988-89 include people joining the scheme in Cambridgeshire. All previous years show figures for Northamptonshire only. Numbers in each year to March 1986 are not available separately.

Financial year	Total number joined in that financial year
1988-89	1,227
1987-88	888
1986-87	446
1985-86

Co-operative Development Agency

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to accept the Co-operative movement's proposals on the future of the Co-operative Development Agency.

Mr. Cope: A number of co-operative organisations have expressed varying views on the merits of the proposal to wind up the CDA. These representations are being given careful consideration. We will announce our conclusions and intentions in due course.

Jobcentre Vacancies (Edinburgh)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the following five vacancies advertised by his Department's jobcentre in Edinburgh are offering rates of pay which fall below wages council rates in their sector: (a) Ref: 2761 E, (b) Ref: 1965 H, (c) Ref: 1985 R, (d) Ref: 1507 Q, and (e) Ref: 2752 K; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Of the vacancies quoted, vacancy (d) Ref: 1507 Q is offering rates of pay which fall below wages council rates in the relevant sector. This error is regretted and my staff are now taking appropriate action to rectify it.

The subject of wages council rates is quite complex and in a service dealing with, on average, over 2·7 million vacancies a year, there is always the possibility that a few vacancies with wages below the minimum will slip through.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The matter under discussion would determine which journalists are invited to press briefings.

Spanish-owned Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the total catch by value for 1988 of the Spanish fishing vessels registered as British.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total catch by value of stocks subject to quota landed into Spain by such vessels during 1988 is estimated to be approximately £19 million.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Spanish-owned vessels are listed on the British fishing register, giving the number at each fishing port and the numbers who have ceased fishing or left the register since the Merchant Shipping Act was passed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since 1 April 1989, only vessels which are largely (at least 75 per cent.) beneficially owned, managed and controlled by British citizens resident in this country are eligible to be registered as British fishing vessels. As a result of the introduction of these new registration rules, some 150 vessels believed to be foreign have been refused registration as British fishing vessels.

Beef

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the effect on the cost of beef in the shops of the underspending by £54 million in 1988 on beef support to producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The cost of beef in the shops depends on a range of factors including supplies of beef and other competing meats, and consumer demand and preferences. Consumers are already benefiting from the fact that the new beef support arrangements include a much reduced role for intervention thereby leaving greater supplies on the market for consumers. Moreover, the estimated change in expenditure on variable premium and special premium payments to producers between 1988/89 and 1989/90 would be only one of the elements affecting the beef market: in addition to those already noted payments to producers in the coming year will also reflect the 42 per cent. increase in the suckler cow premium which was recently announced.

Coast Protection (Arun)

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding delays in allocation for coast protection schemes by the Arun district council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My Department has received two letters recently from Arun district council setting out its needs for capital allocation for coast protection schemes. Coast protection authorities have been notified that allocation is likely to be in short supply this year. Authorities have been asked for an indication of their needs for capital allocation and I expect the first distribution to take place shortly.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on measures undertaken to protect the coastline of each relevant European Economic Community country, whether by Government action or voluntary agencies.

Mr. Ryder: In England, works are carried out by drainage authorities—water authorities, local authorities and internal drainage boards—under the Land Drainage Act 1976 to protect against flooding from the sea and tidal rivers, and by maritime district councils under the Coast Protection Act 1949 to protect the coastline against erosion. Since 1980 more than £320 million has been spent with Government support on capital works to protect the coastline. Recent increases in such support mean that by 1991-92 Government's annual provision will be almost £46 million for flood and coastal defences, of which over two thirds will be spent to protect the coast. Coastal works also attract higher grant rates. As well as major capital works, support is also provided towards comprehensive studies, such as that on the Anglian coastline, with a view to identifying the best techniques of protection for the future.

With regard to the other members of the European Economic Community, my Department has limited information on the measures undertaken to protect coastlines. This information is primarily of a technical nature and arises from liaison with the responsible authorities with the aim of ensuring that we are fully conversant with latest developments in protection.

Fishery Products (EC Proposal)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to place in the Library a copy of the final version of the draft European Community Commission proposal on health conditions affecting the production and the placing in the market of fishery products; what consultations he has planned with the fish processing industry relating to the introduction of the changes proposed in the Commission's document; when the proposal is expected to become law; and what financial assistance will be available to the processors to comply with any new requirements.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The timing of this proposal to Council is uncertain, but I understand that the European Commission expects it to be issued during Sepember; thereafter it will be deposited in the House within the usual time scale. We have consulted widely on the early working drafts, and there will be full consultation, including with processors, once the proposal emerges. I cannot yet say when the new fish hygiene requirements will become law; this will need to be determined once the precise nature and scope of the new measures become clearer. Financial assistance through Community and national schemes under EC regulation 355/77 is currently available to processors to improve their facilities. While this regulation terminates for new applications in October 1990, the Commission has recently submitted proposals to the Council for a successor scheme.

Intervention Food Store

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a list of food stores under the control of the Intervention Board and indicate the type of food stored at each.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Stores used by the Intervention Board and the commodities stored are as follows. The grain stores at Chichester, Clifton, Dumfries, Gainsborough, Kidderminster, Louth, North Humberside and Whitchurch are Government owned; all the others are commercial stores in which the board has hired space.

As the monthly notes deposited in the Library of the House indicate, there has been a very substantial reduction since 1985-86 in the volume of stocks of agricultural commodities held in intervention in this country.

Nerds

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has received from the United States authorities relating to the contamination of the sweets known as Nerds.

Mr. Ryder: None. I have, however, been informed that there was a contamination threat in the United States last year involving these sweets.

Brewery Sites

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many breweries have closed down and their sites used for other purposes in the past 10 years.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested by my hon. Friend is not available. Customs and Excise statistics indicate that there are currently 260 working breweries in the United Kingdom compared with 191 on 1 January 1980. These figures reflect both closures and newly established breweries over this period. Further information may be obtained from the Brewers' Society's statistical handbook.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department is sponsoring research into the incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle which consumed, as calves, infected animal feed as part of a herd of which other members have subsequently been confirmed as bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes, as part of the epidemiological study being carried out by the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether heat treatment of 80°C for 30 minutes is proven to be sufficient to inactivate the infective agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Inactivation experiments are being considered by the Tyrrell committee.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the age of the youngest bovine confirmed as suffering bovine spongiform encepalophathy in 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Two years, eight months.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to record the movements of the offspring of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 22 May, at column 375. Record keeping is also required under the Movement of Animals (Records) Order 1960.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the age of the youngest bovine to be confirmed as suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy to date.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Two years, four months.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department has taken to identify those suppliers of ruminant-based protein for cattle rations whose supplies were originally responsible for the outbreak of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Epidemiological studies into the cause of BSE indicate that it was not due to a few specific sources or suppliers.

Cattle (Ante-mortem Inspections)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 340, if he has now collected the information about ante-mortem inspections of cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the first quarter of this year 16 suspected cases were reported from markets and 26 from slaughterhouses. Of these eight and 16 respectively were confirmed.

Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the cut in funding for the royal botanic gardens at Kew.

Mr. Ryder: None.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the arrangements whereby his Department funds the royal botanic gardens at Kew; and what are the funding levels from his Department for the last three years and for the next two years.

Mr. Ryder: My Department provides funds for the royal botanic gardens, Kew by means of an annual grant in aid. This grant in each of the last three years amounted to:

[1]1987-88	11,387,000
[1]1988-89	[2]10,987,000
[1]1989-90	[3]10,598,000

[1] The downward trend in funding over this period reflects the completion of a major capital works programme.
[2] Provisional outturn.
[3] Estimated outturn.

Present plans for provision of grant in aid over the next two years are for expenditure of £11 million in 1990-91 and £11·2 million in 1991-92, but these will need to be considered, together with other priorities, in the course of the public expenditure surveys.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his projections of staffing levels at the royal botanic gardens, Kew.

Mr. Ryder: Manpower planning at the royal botanic gardens, Kew is a matter for the board of trustees.

Dr. Hugh Fraser

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what capacity and on what subjects his Department is advised by Dr. Hugh Fraser.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department works in close collaboration with a number of research establishments. This includes, in relation to research into scrapie and bovine spongiform encephalopathy, the MRC/AFRC's neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh.

"Mammal and Bird Pests 1983"

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the agricultural development advisory service research and development report, "Mammal and Bird Pests 1983".

Mr. Ryder: A copy of the report to which the hon. Member refers has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Deer

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will introduce a compulsory slaughter and compensation scheme for deer with tuberculosis;

(2) what is his Department's definition of (a) farmed deer, (b) parkland deer, and (c) wild deer;

(3) what is his estimate of the extent of bovine tuberculosis in deer in the United Kingdom;

(4) what steps his Ministry is taking to combat tuberculosis in deer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Legislation has been introduced making tuberculosis in deer notifiable, together with marking and movement record requirements. A slaughter with compensation scheme is being urgently considered, as is the introduction of a voluntary health scheme based on herd testing. A blood test has been developed to support the intradermal tuberculin test and surveys are being conducted to assess the extent of tuberculosis in wild deer. Since 1971 only eight wild deer have been found to be infected. A total of eight deer herds are known to be infected and this compares to some 250 farmed deer herds in this country. Article 13(4)(b) of the Tuberculosis (Deer) Order 1989 defines farmed deer; parkland deer and wild deer are not similarly defined.

Lowestoft Fish Market

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now determine a date for a visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary to Lowestoft fish market.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I very much hope to visit Lowestoft as soon as my other commitments allow.

Hepatitis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 806, he will list the other treatments available in eliminating hepatitis A; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Hepatitis A is effectively eliminated from food by heat treatment. An additional treatment in the case of certain shellfish is maintenance in clean water for a suitable period.

Advisory Committees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the relationship of (a) the food advisory committee, (b) the veterinary products committee and (c) the advisory committee on pesticides to the committee on food safety.

Mr. Ryder: The committee under the chairmanship of Sir Mark Richmond has been given the remit of advising me and my right hon. Friends on the microbiological safety of food. This committee will make recommendations as it sees fit on what further measures may be necessary to deal with food poisoning. We expect it to complete its work by mid-1990. The other three committees are permanent advisory committees with different terms of reference. There is therefore no formal relationship between them and Sir Mark Richmond's committee although the secretaries of the various committees will ensure that there is systematic contact on all matters of mutual interest.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the relationship of (a) the food advisory committee, (b) the veterinary products committee and (c) the advisory committee on pesticides to the steering group on food surveillance.

Mr. Ryder: The steering group on food surveillance (SGFS) is a Government advisory committee which monitors the nutritional value and safety of the United Kingdom food supply. Its primary function is to identify and evaluate potential problems and to propose practical solutions, and it carries this out via a system of 10 working parties covering all the major areas relevant to its work.

The food advisory committee (FAC) is an independent expert advisory committee which advises Ministers on the composition, labelling and advertising of food and on additives, contaminants and other substances that are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation. The FAC is normally invited to comment on draft SGFS reports and may be asked to advise on any action required as a result of the findings of the SGFS.

The veterinary products committee (VPC), an independent committee of experts in both human and veterinary health established under section 4 of the Medicines Act 1968, advises the licensing authority on the licensing of veterinary medicines. The advisory committee on pesticides (ACP), which is also an independent statutory body, advises Ministers on approvals for pesticides.

The SGFS keeps in close touch with the FAC, VPC and ACP and also specifically monitors pesticide residues and veterinary residues in food via its working party on pesticide residues and its working party on veterinary residues in animal products.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates of meetings of the advisory committee on pesticides and the items discussed at each meeting over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The advisory committee on pesticides met eight times and discussed a number of applications for approval of new active ingredients, reviews of older pesticides and a wide variety of related questions. A report on its work in 1988 will be published later this year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates of meetings of the veterinary products committee and the items discussed at each meeting over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the last 12 months the veterinary products committee met on the following dates:

23 June 1988
20-21 July 1988
21-22 September 1988
20 October 1988
17 November 1988
14 December 1988
19 January 1989
15-16 February 1989
15-16 March 1989
19-20 April 1989
17-18 May 1989

A summary of the VPC's discussions is contained within the "Annual Report for the Medicines Commission and Section 4 Committees", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The 1988 annual report is due to be published in the next few weeks and I shall ensure that a copy is made available in the Library.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the products for which product licences were (a) granted and (b) refused by the veterinary products committee in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Product licences are granted by the licensing authority on the advice of the veterinary products committee. Details of all newly licensed products are published regularly in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes. It would be a breach of the commercially confidential nature of the veterinary products committee's discussions to list those applications where the committee was minded to advise the licensing authority that a licence ought not be granted.

Food Labelling

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the members and (b) the observers of the United Kingdom delegation at the Codex Alimentarius meeting on food labelling in Ottawa in April 1989 and the organisations for whom they worked.

Mr. Ryder: The head of food standards division (Mr. C. A. Cockbill) and the head of nutrition branch (Dr. D. H. Buss) from my Department represented the United Kingdom at this year's meeting of the Codex committee on food labelling. There were no observers in the United Kingdom delegation.

Advisory Committees (Publications)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list any publications of (a) the food advisory committee, (b) the veterinary products committee and (c) the advisory committee on pesticides that were produced in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: There have been no publications from the food advisory committee in the last 12 months, but Ministers have made the following announcements as a result of advice received from the committee:

—use of the term 'low alcohol' in the labelling of alcoholic drinks (MAFF Press Release 358/88
—use of nutritional claims in food labelling and advertising (MAFF Press Release 253/88)
—a proposal to ban the use of Mineral Hydrocarbons in Food (MAFF Press Release 53/89)
—a proposal to ban the sale of certain pills intended as slimming aids (MAFF Press Release 388/88).

In addition, the committee's comments on the report of the working party on pesticide residues 1985-88, published on 13 March 1988 in the food surveillance series, were appended to that report.

During this same period, the 1987 annual report of the veterinary products committee was published within the 1987 report of the Medicines Commission. In addition, the advisory committee on pesticides' annual report for 1986 and its report on aerial applications of pesticides in 1987 were published.

Ministers also announced the results of seven evaluations of new pesticides by the committee (press release 333/88) changes to, or revocation of, the approvals of four pesticides (press releases 312/88, 433/88, 450/88 and 204/88) and issued a paper reporting the results of routine reviews of other, currently permitted pesticides (press release 117/89). Five other pesticide approvals have been included in the Department's pesticide register.

All the publications and press releases have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the pesticides for which approvals were (a) given and (b) rejected in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: During 1988 my Department received 1,324 applications in relation to pesticide products and rejected 347 of them. In the same period we issued 1,371 approvals. These figures cover a variety of changes to existing products as well as new products. The latest annual listing of approved products is in "Pesticides 1989", which is available in the Library of the House.

Abattoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a hygiene report for each of the abattoirs in the United Kingdom which received suspensions of their export licences under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspections) Regulations in 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Reports on individual premises must remain confidential to the operator of those premises, the Ministry and the local authority.

Alar

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people in his Department have been working, and how many man hours have been spent, on testing the pesticide Alar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 25 May at column 745, the review of the pesticide Alar was carried out by members of the advisory committee on pesticides. The detailed information available referred to in my response was assembled by scientisits in pesticides safety division at Harpenden. In addition four scientists at the ADAS central science laboratory at Harpenden have spent some 750 man hours on work relating to residues of Alar including the establishment of a reliable method of detecting the small traces of residue that may be found in foodstuffs.

WALES

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: I follow no guidelines other than common sense considerations in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by my Department; these may suggest different journalists for different briefings according to specialist subjects and geography.

Rating

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what each district council in Wales for the financial year 1989-90, without safety net, would have charged a household with two adults in 1989-90;

(2) what was the average domestic rate bill per household for the financial year 1989-90 for each district council in Wales;

(3) what, for each district council in Wales for the financial year 1989-90, the notional community charge per adult without safety net would have been if community charge had been in force in 1989-90;

(4) what, for each district council in Wales for the financial year 1989-90, the notional community charge per adult, with safety net would have been if the community charge had been in force in 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Illustrative figures, based on 1989-90 rate precepts and grant levels, are given in the table. Community charge figures have been calculated using present needs assessments which are under review. The average domestic rate bills given are on a basis consistent with the community charge figures.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was raised by local authorities in rates in Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: The amount budgeted to be raised in rates in 1989-90 by the local authorities in Wales is £786·7 million.

Planning (Completion Notices)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many completion notices have been issued by each Welsh local authority in each of the past three years in respect of part-implemented planning consents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Three completion notices have been issued by Welsh local authorities in the past three years; by Delyn borough council and Port Talbot borough council in 1988 and Carmarthen district council in 1989. The Port Talbot and Carmarthen notices were confirmed by the Secretary of State and the Delyn one rejected.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the figures for (a) all unemployed and (b) youth unemployment (16 to 24) for the Pembroke constituency in January 1987, January 1988, January 1989 and at the latest available date both in number and percentage terms.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of unemployed claimants in the Pembroke constituency is as follows:

	January 1987	January 1988	January[2] 1989	April[2] 1989
All unemployed claimants	7,381	6,232	4,899	4,088
Youth unemployed[1]	2,337	1,966	1,416	1,153

[1] Unemployed claimants aged up to and including 24 years.
[2] These figures have been affected by the new benefit regulations for under 18 year olds introduced in September 1988.

Unemployment rates are not calculated for parliamentary constituencies.

Sewage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those applications made to him in the current year by water authorities for the lowering of effluent standards.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what applications have been made by the Welsh water authority for approval of relaxations and amendments to existing consent standards for the discharge of effluent from sewage treatment works; and if he will list the relaxations and amendments requested.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the table. I have received applications from Welsh Water for variations of existing discharge consents, which will reflect the current performance of individual works in respect of the following sewage treatment works.

EC (Financial Support)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much financial support Wales received from the European Community in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: Details of financial support from the European Community in 1987 are as follows:—

Water Quality

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the current water quality clarifications of rivers in Wales and any changes being recommended to these clarifications by the Welsh water authority and any changes in water quality objectives that may be involved in these reclarifications.

Mr. Grist: The current water authority classifications of rivers in Wales are contained within the 1985 river quality survey, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Any changes will be incorporated in the next survey, which is due to be carried out in 1990.

Polytechnic of Wales

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement as to the alleged deficiencies in the financial accounts of the Polytechnic of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. This is a matter for the Polytechnic of Wales' maintaining authority (Mid Glamorgan county council).

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the most recent resignations of members of staff at the Polytechnic of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Mid Glamorgan county council has informed officials that two members of the Polytechnic of Wales' staff have resigned following an investigation by the authority's internal audit department.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Debt

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet other Foreign Ministers to discuss international debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the written reply given him on 8 February 1989 at column 739.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the effect on the security of the Falkland Islands of the recent election in Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: We are satisfied that the garrison remains adequate for the present, but we keep force levels in the Falklands under constant review, particularly since Argentina has not yet declared a cessation of hostilities. We would not hesitate to increase the garrison if necessary.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The FCO has a daily press conference at 12.30 open to any bona fide journalist. We decide which journalists to invite to other press briefings in the light of the matter under discussion.

Bulgaria (Turkish Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation Her Majesty's Government have made at the current CSCE human rights conference in Paris about the treatment of the Turkish ethnic minorities in Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our long-standing concern about Bulgaria's treatment of its Turkish minority has been heightened recently by the harsh reaction of the Bulgarian authorities to demonstrations in the north-east and south of the country.

I raised this question with the Bulgarian ambassador on 1 June, and the leader of our delegation to the Paris conference referred to it in his opening statement on 31 May. Our concern is shared by our EC partners, and the presidency is making representations to the Bulgarian authorities on behalf of the Twelve.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals are being considered by the European Commission for a tax on energy consumption to finance recovery of the disappearing tropical rain forests of the third world; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Commission has not tabled any proposals for action to conserve rain forests.

Hong Kong

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will explain the differences in the categories of Hong Kong residents referred to in Government replies on 6 June as (a) 3·6 million, Official Report, column 16, (b) 3·5 million, Official Report, column 16 and (c) 3·25 million, Official Report, column 31.

Mr. Eggar: There is no exact figure for the number of British dependent territories citizens in Hong Kong. The figures quoted are all estimates.

China (British Students)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British students are studying full or part-time in China; and what measures are being taken to ensure their safety.

Mr. Eggar: The exact number of British students in China, either full-time or part-time is not known. Prior to the outbreak of the present troubles, the British Council was aware of 135 full-time students at Chinese universities; but there were probably more, some in the provinces.

In recent days, the British embassy in Peking, the British consulate-general in Shanghai and the British Council offices in these cities have sought to contact all those students registered with them and with others whose names were subsequently provided. They have been given the same advice as that given to other British nationals, that is, if they are in areas where there has been trouble and if they feel concerned for their safety, they should leave China as soon as possible by normal commercial means such as scheduled air services.

Many students were given refuge in the British embassy. At least 70 have left for Hong Kong, some of whom are now back in the United Kingdom.

Minister of State (Lunch)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the lunch between Mr. John Sergeant, chief political correspondent of the BBC, and the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office at the Mijanou restaurant on Thursday 25 May was brought forward at short notice.

Mr. Waldegrave: Two lunches with journalists, which had been long requested, were brought forward following the postponement at short notice of my visit to Hungary, originally scheduled for 24 and 25 May.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when Mr. Afzal Khan, whose date of birth is 18 November 1969, and whose reference is IMM 92807, applied for entry clearance to the United Kingdom at her Majesty's embassy in Islamabad; when his application was refused; and when an explanatory statement setting out the detailed grounds of refusal was despatched to Mr. Khan or his representation;

(2) when instructions were sent to the British embassy in Islamabad to issue a visa to Mr. Zahood Ahmed to enter the United Kingdom; when Mr. Ahmed, whose date of birth is 22 July 1967 and whose Home Office reference is A412361, first applied for entry clearance; when Mr. Ahmed's appeal against refusal to grant him a visa was upheld; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not readily available as the embassy in Islamabad is closed for the Moslem weekend. I will reply to the hon. Member in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trading Partners

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list Britain's top 20 trading partners for (a) 1979 and (b) 1988 with the value and percentage shown of exports to and imports from each.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the table:

United Kingdom's top 20 trading partners

Central America (Trade)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the amount of trade in each direction between central America and the United Kingdom for each year since 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the table:

United Kingdom trade with Central America from 1985-1988

Year	Imports	Exports
1985	315·7	378·3
1986	193·8	319·1
1987	316·8	344·2
1988	247·7	315·4

Notes:

[1] 1988 figures are provisional.

[2] Exports fob; imports cif.

Central America: Belize, Cuba, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Mexico.

Mail Users Association (Publication)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received the May 1989 publication from the Mail Users Association entitled "Deliver us from the Post Office"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I was interested to see a copy of the Mail Users Association-Association of Mail Order Publishers report. The report's recommendations mainly cover operational matters, and so fall within the responsibility of the Post Office. The Post Office has no present plans to implement its recommendations, but keeps the situation under review.

Television Technology

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the combined initiatives by the (a) Japanese Government and business community and (b) United States Government and business community, with regard to research and commercial development of high-definition display television technology at the level of (i) their internal and (ii) international markets; and if he will make a statement regarding the United Kingdom's competitiveness, internal and international, in this technology.

Mr. Forth: The Japanese have been developing high-definition television technology for the last 18 years at a cost of some $700 million and are able to offer professional studio products to customers. In 1988 the state-owned broadcasting company established a demonstration satellite link feeding coverage of the Seoul Olympics to 200 high-definition displays at 50 sites including shopping malls, railway stations and leisure centres.

Until recently the United States supported the Japanese high-definition television system and had no development programme of its own, but it has now indicated its intention to develop a system more suited to its own particular requirements. The United States Defence Department has announced a $30 million programme to fund research on high-definition television related technology. A number of United States companies have presented a plan for a $1·35 billion national collaborative high-definition television project to Congress. One recent United States industry estimate has suggested that the worldwide market for high-definition television could total $40 billion by the year 2010.

The development of high-definition television for Europe is a collaborative activity under the EUREKA programme to which the United Kingdom is firmly committed. Leading organisations in the United television industry are at the forefront of many aspects of European high-definition television technology, and with Government support are making significant contributions to the EUREKA project. Equipment developed in the project was successfully demonstrated at the international broadcasting convention last September. The United Kingdom is also fully involved in European efforts to gain international acceptance for the European system.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Government Departments are assisting with research and sponsorship for the high-definition display television technology.

Mr. Forth: This is the responsibility of my Department.

EEC (Burden Sharing)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions have been held with EEC Ministers regarding any burden-sharing arrangement applying to the import of textiles after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs on 9 March 1989 at column 595. There has so far been no detailed Community discussion of future arrangements, including burden-sharing arrangements, for EC quotas on textiles and clothing.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received in the current year, to date, urging the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Support for the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement was expressed by representatives of the Apparel Knitwear and Textiles Alliance and by a delegation from the all-party group for textiles and the textile industry support campaign when I met them on 11 April and 18 May respectively. In addition I have received seven letters in this sense from hon. Members and the United Kingdom industry.

Selective Investment Brokers Ltd.

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 480, why his Department did not undertake an investigation into the affairs of Selective Investment Brokers Ltd. in December 1986, or earlier following letters to the company from Companies house, Cardiff, in 1984 and 1985 attempting to obtain information regarding the company's trading status;

(2) what action was taken by his Department to initiate an investigation into the affairs of Selective Investment Brokers Ltd., using powers under section 447 of the 1985 Companies Act, or any other relevant powers, following the submission of the Wiltshire constabulary to the Director of Public Prosecutions and his opinion that the report did not disclose sufficient evidence to justify criminal proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The purpose of the letters sent out by Companies house to Selective Investment Brokers Ltd. was to discover whether it was trading and whether dissolution action against it should be taken. Many such letters are sent out routinely every year. They do not in themselves indicate that investigations of the companies to which they are addressed are merited.

In December 1986 my Department received a complaint made on behalf of an investor in the company. The Bank of England was informed of this complaint in January 1987. Subsequently, there was liaison between the DTI, the Bank of England, and the Wiltshire police who made inquiries. A report was submitted by the police to the Director of Public Prosecutions who concluded that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a criminal investigation. The DPP did not refer the matter to my Department which did not receive any further information from any source concerning the company until after it was placed in voluntary liquidation in June 1988.

ENVIRONMENT

Rates

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average domestic rates bill in England and Wales for 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: £502.

Water and Sewage Charges

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the average water rate and sewage charge made in England and Wales in 1989-90;

(2) what is the average water rate and sewage charge made to people on income support in England and Wales for 1989-90.

Mr. Howard: The average domestic bill for water authority customers in England and Wales in 1989-90 is £2·29 per week. Information is not separately available for customers on income support.

Aquatic Flora and Fauna

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 4 May to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, column 245, whether he will estimate the extent of (a) short-term and (b) long-term damage to aquatic flora and fauna in inland waters and estuaries caused by pollution incidents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Specific information concerning the impact of pollution incidents is not available centrally. Water authorities make their own detailed assessments in individual cases: these are to enable management to ensure that appropriate remedial measures can be carried out. The cumulative impact of all sources of pollution is assessed through routine river quality monitoring, the results of which are published comprehensively in the regular national river quality surveys. The most recent survey was carried out in 1985. In future this work will be carried out by the National Rivers Authority, which will also wish to review monitoring procedures. Work on the next river quality survey will commence in 1990.

Waste Disposal Authorities

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Suffolk county council on his consultation paper regarding the role and function of waste disposal authorities; and what steps he is taking to avoid a hiatus in the search for and acquisition of new disposal sites as foreshadowed by the county council between the date of issuance of his Green Paper and the anticipated date of his implementing his proposed changes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have received from Suffolk county council detailed comments about the consultation paper on the role and functions of waste disposal authorities. These comments, along with many others, are being given careful consideration.

Until any changes are implemented, waste disposal authorities will retain their duties under present legislation to arrange, through public or private sector facilities, for the disposal of waste collected by the waste collection authorities. Under the arrangements proposed in the consultation paper public facilities would be provided by local authority waste disposal companies. On the due date all the waste disposal assets of a disposal authority would be transferred to the company which will be under the authority's control as shareholder and board member. There is no reason why a hiatus need develop in the search for and acquisition of new disposal sites.

Water Privatisation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to introduce provisions by which a privatised water industry could impose a price surcharge to discourage the use of water during a period of drought.

Mr. Howard: No.

Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 283, to the hon. Member for Don Valley, what have been the results of his deliberations in respect of changes to section 19 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have not yet reached any decisions on this matter. We shall report to the House as soon as we have done so.

Nitrate Pollution

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of additional nitrate pollution in water induced by run-off through the use of urea to clear frost from highways and runways.

Mr. Howard: We have no evidence to suggest that the use of urea to clear frost from highways and runways contributes significantly to nitrate pollution of water.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing housing starts in each region in the quarter to March showing the percentage change in starts from the quarter ending February 1989 and the quarter ending March 1988.

Mr. Trippier: Housebuilding starts for regions in England in the March quarter of 1989 and the corresponding period a year earlier are given in the table.

	Housebuilding starts in thousands
	March quarter 1988	March quarter 1989	Percentage change
North	2·1	2·6	+23
Yorkshire and Humberside	4·3	4·4	+4
East Midlands	5·2	4·7	−9
East Anglia	3·9	3·3	−15
South East:
Greater London	4·0	4·3	+8
Rest of South East	14·6	12·2	−17
South West	7·3	5·4	−26
West Midlands	5·2	4·4	−16
North West	4·5	5·0	+12
England	50·9	46·2	−9

Provisional estimates of housebuilding starts in the three months to February 1989 were given in my answer to the hon. Member on 4 May 1989.

Seal Pups

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations have been received by his Department seeking a continuation of the European Community ban on the import of harp and hooded seal pup skins and products; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received a number of representations seeking a continuation of the EC ban. The United Kingdom fully supported the European Commission's proposal for an indefinite extension of the ban and we were successful in securing our European partners' agreement to this at the EC Environment Council meeting on 8 June.

Water Supplies (Chlorine)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the levels of chlorine in water supplies in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: This information is not held centrally. It is for individual water undertakers with their knowledge of local conditions to determine the level of chlorine necessary to disinfect the water supply and to maintain bacterial quality of the water during distribution.

Peregrine Falcons

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure the safety of peregrine falcons in Wales under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The peregrine falcon is listed on schedule 1 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 as a species protected by special penalties. The Act makes it an offence to kill, injure or take a peregrine; destroy or take its eggs or damage or destroy its nest. Anyone found guilty of such an offence is liable to a fine of up to £2,000. Enforcement of these provisions is a matter for the police authorities and the courts.

Wolf Hybrid Dogs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now halt the sale of wolf hybrid dogs as pets and have them registered as wild animals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 provides controls over the keeping of wild animals by requiring people who wish to do so to obtain a licence from the appropriate local authority. These licences are issued only if stringent conditions concerning safety and welfare have been met. The term "dangerous wild animal" is not defined in the Act, other than by reference to a list of species, which includes wolves, in the schedule to the Act. Mammal hybrids (arising from cross breeding of domestic and wild animals) are covered by the Act if at least one parent is of a species listed in the schedule to the Act.

Separate legislation, the Dogs Act 1871, exists to control dangerous dogs, and empowers the police to take action against anyone failing to control a dangerous dog.

Birchfield Estate, Handsworth

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date Birmingham city council submitted a proposal for a security project on the Birchfield estate, Handsworth, Birmingham; and when he expects a decision to be made.

Mr. Trippier: The idea was first suggested in December 1987. An urban programme scheme proposal was received from Birmingham city council on 7 September 1988 and approval in principle was issued on 29 September 1988. Detailed costs and plans allowing the go-ahead to spend have not been received to date.

Birds

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government are taking to ensure the continued survival within the United Kingdom of the following species of bird: (a) the bittern, (b) the red-backed shrike, (c) the corncrake, (d) the red kite, (e) the white-tailed sea eagle and (f) the marsh-warbler.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All these species are listed in schedule 1 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 as being protected by special penalties. Anyone attempting, in contravention of the Act, to kill, injure or take such a bird or to destroy its eggs or nests is liable on conviction to a fine of up to £2,000. In addition, important habitats are safeguarded through the Act's provisions for the notification of sites of special scientific interest. Where appropriate, further action is taken through the classification of special protection areas under article 4 of EC directive 79/409/EEC.

Nene Washes (Bird Reserve)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it was a condition of the grant application recently discussed between the Nature Conservancy Council and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds to extend the existing Royal Society for the Protection of Birds reserve on the Nene Washes, near Whittlesey, Cambridgeshire, by the purchase of 16·5 acres of adjoining land within the existence site of special scientific interest, that no grant would be given unless the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds allowed shooting over it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that the NCC considered the application by RSPB for the purchase of land to extend their existing Nene Washes reserve strictly in the light of the policy agreed with my right hon. Friend that traditional country rights and uses should not be interfered with wherever they are not in direct conflict with conservation interests. Since there was no evidence that the continuation of sporting rights over the site was incompatible with conservation interests the NCC felt unable to offer grant assistance to RSPB if the extinguishment of those rights formed an integral part of the purchase objectives.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether restrictions relating to products using chlorofluorocarbons will include inhalers used for medicinal purposes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Members of the British Aerosol Manufacturers Association have agreed to end all non-essential use of chlorofluorocarbons in their products by the end of this year. The industry is actively researching alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons in medical equipment and we expect these to be introduced as soon as they are commercially available and have been approved by the appropriate authorities.

Community Charge

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the community charge regulations allow for delivery of community charge registration forms by registration officers in England to addresses in Scotland;

(2) whether the community charge regulations allow registration officers in England to take action against occupiers of houses in Scotland for non-registration for community charge purposes.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 6 June 1987]: A community charge registration officer may request information from anyone he reasonably believes is, or has been, or will be subject to a community charge in his area. Anyone failing without reasonable excuse to supply the information, or knowingly supplying wrong information, may be subject to a penalty. Nothing in the legislation precludes requests being made to an address in Scotland, or penalties being imposed on individuals with an address in Scotland, in connection with a community charge arising in England or Wales.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on (a) the progress being made in making fully operational the valuation and community charge tribunals, (b) the additional costs involved and (c) the role of his Department's staff in this process.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 9 June 1989]: The Department's staff are working closely with members and clerks of the valuation and community charge tribunals to ensure that they have the resources to carry out their functions. Good progress has been made in designing and installing computer systems, in providing enlarged accommodation, and in recruiting and training the staff needed for this task. The cost of running the tribunals in England in 1989-90 is expected to exceed the cost of the old local valuation panels in 1988-89 by about £4 million.

Effluent

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those applications which have been sent to his Department in the current year for the lowering of effluent standards by water authorities.

Mr. Howard: No. On 11 May, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced at column 520 that a list of those sewage works for which applications for time-limited consents had been made had been placed in the Library of the House. These consents will regularise current performance while improvement work is undertaken as part of the £1 billion capital programme to bring sewage treatment works up to standard by March 1992. On completion, long-term consent conditions for these works, no less stringent than those which presently apply, will be imposed. The overall programme will result in significant improvements to river quality.

DEFENCE

MARILYN

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with MARILYN.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made in the House on 8 June at columns 388-90, in which I announced that copies of an abridged version of the MARILYN report, which will underpin much of the Ministry of Defence's future work on the problems of army manpower supply in the years ahead, had been placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear missiles have been stationed in the United Kingdom since the United States-Soviet intermediate nuclear forces treaty came into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the time the INF treaty came into effect last summer there were 96 operational United States group-launched cruise missiles (GLCMs) at RAF Greenham Common and 16 at RAF Molesworth. Since then RAF Molesworth has been closed as a GLCM forward operating base and all the missiles removed.

Half the missiles from RAF Greenham Common will be withdrawn in late 1989; the rest will return to the United States in the first half of 1991.

US Air Force Aircraft (Missiles)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many United States Air Force aircraft based in the United Kingdom are equipped with (a) AGM-69A short-range attack missiles and (b) air-launched cruise missiles; if he will name the types of aircraft that would be used to deploy these weapons, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

"Who Framed Colin Wallace"

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the allegations concerning the activities of the information policy unit of the Army information services reported during the 1970s made by former serving army officers and civil servants reported in the book, "Who Framed Colin Wallace" by Mr. Paul Foot.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Destroyers and Frigates

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many destroyers and frigates of the surface fleet were available for service at 24 hours notice on 1 June 1988, 1 January 1989 and 1 June 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of ships available for operations at precise periods of notice are classified. However, the table shows the total number of destroyers and frigates in service together with those that were available for operational deployment immediately or within a short period for each of the dates requested.

Number of DD/FF available for operational deployment immediately or within a short period

	Total DD/FF in service	Number
1 June 1988	47	40
1 January 1989	48	40
1 June 1989	47	40

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Invitations to press briefings depend very much on the subject under discussion.

NATO (Binational Divisions)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the creation of binational divisions within NATO, on the model of the Anglo-Dutch marine force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom/Netherlands amphibious force has an important part to play in NATO's plans for reinforcement of the northern region. We welcome such practical bilateral co-operation within the Alliance where it serves to enhance overall defence capabilities.

Service Personnel (Children's Education)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many children of service men are being educated in the private sector on Ministry of Defence grants; and how many of these children are being educated at Crookham Court school, Newbury, Berkshire.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at March 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, there were some 22,400 children of service personnel for whom boarding school allowance was being claimed; this figure includes those attending state boarding schools. At Crookham Court school, there are at present 32 children of service parents.

Rosyth Dockyard (Share Sales)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he intends to take to prevent a foreign sale of shares in Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: The term contract requires that the prior approval of the Secretary of State must be sought to any change in the ownership or structure of the management company, and the parent companies FKI, Babcock and Thorn EMI are required to ensure that any foreign shareholding in the dockyard management company is less than 30 per cent.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he had before 7 June with Thorn EMI over the sale of its stake in Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies have indicated an interest in purchasing the Thorn EMI stake in Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department is not aware of any expressions of interest.

HMS Southampton

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement on HMS Southampton.

Mr. Sainsbury: Shortly.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to meet Thorn EMI to discuss the future of Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have no plans to do so at present. My officials are however in touch with Thorn EMI and also with FKI Babcock, the majority partner in management company at Rosyth (BTL).

Royal Dockyard Management

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for defence whether he will review the contract for royal dockyard management as a result of the uncertainty created from company takeovers.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The term contract requires that the prior approval of the Secretary of State must be sought to any change in the ownership of, or structure of the management company.

Nuclear Weapons (Germany)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the Palme commission proposal to negotiate a 150 km nuclear weapon free zone on either side of the inter-German border.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This Government oppose the creation of a nuclear weapon free zone in Europe, which we believe would not increase but reduce security and stability. The territory of such a zone would still be under threat from weapons positioned outside the zone but targeted on it. Verification would be difficult, if not impossible, since the small size and mobility of many nuclear weapons means that they could be rapidly deployed back into the zone at a time of tension, thus increasing rather than reducing the risk of war. Such a zone would also undermine NATO's strategy of forward defence.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when, pursuant to the undertaking given by the hon. Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) on 8 June during the debate on the Army the hon. Member for Linlithgow may expect a detailed reply to points raised during the debate on former officer Colin Wallace and the role of Army intelligence in BBC statements relating to alleged blackmail of Labour hon. Members.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what mechanism exists to allow for reconsideration of the allocation of a prisoner to a particular prison;

(2) what weighting is given to the needs of a prisoner when the allocation to a particular prison is made; and at what stage in the process of allocation an assessment takes place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The allocation decision is made as soon as possible after the prisoner is received under sentence, and takes account, inter alia, of an assessment of the prisoner's needs which is based on information from records and from interview. The weight which it is possible to give to this factor varies according to circumstances and each case is considered on its merits. Prison service procedures require the allocation decision to be reviewed at least annually following reassessment of the prisoner's security category. It is open to any prisoner to apply at any time to be reallocated.

Police Car Chases

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths there have been during the current year as a result of police car chases (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the west midlands.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Full information will not be available until returns are submitted by individual forces to Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary after the end of the year. However, I am aware of 12 specific accidents which have occurred since 1 March 1989 in cases where the police were pursuing a vehicle, or responding to emergency calls, which have resulted in a total of 15 fatalities. Two of these accidents occurred in the west midlands police area. I understand that there was one other fatal accident in the west midlands police area in February 1989.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Media representatives are invited to press briefings according to the nature of the subject to be discussed.

Street Robbery

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking against street robbery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The police give high priority to dealing with street robbery. In 1988 robbery, including mugging, fell by 4 per cent. Certain high-crime urban areas will benefit from our safer cities programme, and we have produced a crime prevention handbook which contains advice on how to reduce the risk of being attacked; nearly 2·5 million copies have been distributed.

Passports

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the speed and efficiency of the passport issuing offices; and if he will consider instituting regional offices for this purpose.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 6 June to a question from the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) at column 47. There are at present six regional passport offices in the United Kingdom. Since the great majority of passport applications are usually dealt with by post, the location of the issuing office is not normally a significant factor in determining the speed of service. We shall, however, be reviewing the location and number of offices later this year.

Democracy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has undertaken on increasing the levels of participation in the democratic process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None directly, though the numbers of people registered to vote in each constituency or electoral area, and the numbers voting, are published after each parliamentary or European parliamentary general election, and following the local government elections in May each year. I understand that an opinion poll carried out by NOP in February/March 1988 found that nearly a quarter of those surveyed said that they would be more likely to vote in local elections when the community charge is introduced.

Hillsborough Stadium Disaster

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who compiled the video of the Hillsborough tragedy which was shown to the inquiry on 19 May; who supervised the editing of it; what steps he is taking to ensure that the edited-out film was not relevant to the policing of the event; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: These are matters for Lord Justice Taylor, but I understand that the video tape shown on 19 May to his inquiry into the Hillsborough stadium disaster was compiled by the west midlands police inquiry team and the Treasury Solicitor's Department from material supplied to the inquiry by the BBC, South Yorkshire police and Sheffield Wednesday football club. Further material was subsequently shown to the inquiry.

A catalogue of all the video material available to the inquiry has been given to counsel for all the parties represented, who may see any of it if they wish to do so.

Lollipop Persons

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North of 20 April, Official Report, columns 289-90, what progress has been made with the review of the pay of lollipop ladies and gentlemen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Authority has recently been given for an increase averaging 4·5 per cent. in the basic rates payable to school crossing patrols with effect from 1 September 1988. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the new rates of pay (including the arrears) will be paid from the middle of this month.

Children's Television

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he gave to children's television programmes provision in drawing up his White Paper on broadcasting; if he will take steps to ensure adequate funding for specific high-quality British material for children's television; and what steps he will take to ensure a minimum adequate level of income for children's programmes on channels 3 and 5.

Mr. Renton: There is at present no specific requirement on the broadcasting authorities to provide children's television programmes, other than schools broadcasts and educational programming—and we see no case for creating such a new requirement in the future.

The general approach of the White Paper on broadcasting is that regulatory bodies should no longer seek to lay down in detail what programmes are shown and when. The White Paper makes it clear that the BBC will continue to be expected to provide high-quality programming across the full range of public tastes and interests. The existing remit of channel 4 is also to be fully sustained. As regards channels 3 and 5, the White Paper proposes that licensees should be subject to a series of quality tests including requirements to provide a diverse programme service calculated to appeal to a variety of tastes and interests.

We see no reason why high-quality children's programmes, sustained by viewer demand, should not continue to flourish on British television after 1992.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has undertaken into the needs of children for high-quality British programmes other than educational programmes on television.

Mr. Renton: None. Market research into the level and nature of the demand for children's television programmes is a matter for the broadcasters.

Suicides (Prisoners)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the prisoners who committed suicide whilst on remand in 1987 and 1988 had been remanded for psychiatric reports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Three in 1987 and three in 1988.

Television Licences

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were imprisoned for failing to pay fines imposed for using a television set without a licence in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Slopping Out

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the number of and (b) the proportion of inmates of young offender institutions who have to slop out.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 March 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, there were something over 3,100 young offenders having to slop out. The proportion of inmates in young offender institutions having to slop out on that date was approximately 46 per cent.

European Prison Rules

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which rules of the European prison rules are not yet complied with by the prison service; which rules the service does not currently have plans to comply with; and what are the estimated dates for compliance with those rules which the prison service intends to comply with but has not yet done so.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European prison rules are intended to guide member states of the Council of Europe in their internal legislation and practice. Her Majesty's prison service in England and Wales complies fully or partially with all of them. Those which are partially complied with are: 1, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 25, 39, 42, 65, 67, 71, 94, 96 and 99. There are at present no plans to comply fully with some aspects of rules 14, 39, 67, 96 and 99. The remainder will be complied with as soon as practicable, but it is not possible to give estimated dates.

Electronic Surveillance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if electronic surveillance schemes will be used in court areas in England and Wales which have bail information schemes.

Mr. John Patten: No bail information schemes, as normally defined, are operating within the three electronic monitoring areas.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it will be possible for participants in the electronic surveillance schemes in England and Wales to remove the equipment during the course of the pilot project.

Mr. John Patten: Yes, but any removal of the equipment will be readily detectable.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if telephones will be installed, or homes provided in appropriate cases, for participants in electronic surveillance schemes.

Mr. John Patten: If a participant who is otherwise suitable does not have a telephone, one will be installed, free of charge. But it will not be possible for him to use it in the normal way: it will provide solely for communication with the central monitoring station through electronic barring at the telephone exchange. The trials will proceed on the basis that participants must be resident in the petty sessional division concerned or be able to make suitable arrangements for such residence during any period of electronic monitoring.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the maximum length of time that a participant can expect to spend tagged in an electronic surveillance scheme in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available in the form requested. The period for which a participant may be monitored will depend on a number of factors, including whether the case is committed for trial to the Crown court. In such a case the average waiting time from first appearance to completion at magistrates' courts in 1988 was eight weeks. The average time from committal to a Crown court to the start of the case was 12·2 weeks.

Cashpoint Thefts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a public inquiry into the banks' handling of cashpoint thefts in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: No. The working group on commercial robbery set up by the standing conference on crime prevention reported in 1986 and did not identify this as a notable problem.

Metropolitan Police Officers (Firearms)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the code of conduct concerning the use of firearms by police officers of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: The guidelines on the issue and use of firearms, which apply to all police forces in England and Wales, were revised in December 1986 by the Association of Chief Police Officers in conjunction with the Home Office working group on the police use of firearms.

A copy of these guidelines was placed in the Library on 3 February 1987, as part of a summary of the working group's 1986 report.

Chinese Students (Political Refugees)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to accept applications for political asylum from Chinese students presently studying in the United Kingdom, who fear for their safety if they return to China.

Mr. Renton: Any application for asylum will be considered in accordance with the UN 1951 convention relating to the status of refugees.

In addition, while the situation in China remains uncertain, we shall look sympathetically at any application by a Chinese national to extend their stay, depending on their individual circumstances.

Isle of Man (Police Action)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has sought or received from the Isle of Man authorities regarding police action against Transport and General Workers Union officials, Bernard Moffat and David Quirk, following allegations regarding leaked information; if he has received representations that such action contravenes the European convention on human rights; what action he has taken or proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received no representations on the matters referred to. Having ascertained the facts from the Isle of Man authorities, he is satisfied that the matters are the responsibility of the Isle of Man Government. He has received no indication in this connection of a possible contravention of the European convention on human rights.

Police Forces (Training Manuals)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the content of training manuals used in police forces in relation to HIV infection, AIDS, hepatitis B, and other similar issues; and whether copies of such manuals can be placed in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Individual police force training manuals are not held centrally. However, Home Office circulars have been issued to all police forces in England and Wales giving guidance on AIDS (No. 72/1988 on 12 August 1988) and on hepatitis B (No. 48/1989 on 9 June 1989). Copies were sent to the Library.

Lieutenant Colonel Michael Aquino

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if in view of investigations taking place in the United States of America by the criminal investigation division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the United States Army, chief of police of the state of Utah and the Attorney-General of County Medolino in northern California of Lieutenant Colonel Michael Aquino of the United States Army involving allegations of serious sexual offences against children, he will take steps to deny him entry into the United Kingdom until such time as all allegations have been tested in a court of law in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is unlikely that action under the immigration rules could be taken on the basis of untested allegations alone, but should Colonel Aquino either come here or apply for an entry clearance to do so, a decision about his eligibility under the immigration rules would be taken in the light of all the information available at the time.

TRANSPORT

Rail Investment

10. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase the amount of money available for investment in the railway system.

Mr. Channon: Yes. I expect investment by BR in the railway to be some £781 million this financial year, the highest in real terms since 1962. BR plans to increase its investment by a further 19 per cent. by 1991-92.

Motorway Congestion

12. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to relieve congestion on the motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The measures announced by my right hon. Friend on 18 May in "Roads for Prosperity", more than doubling the trunk road programme to over £12 billion, are aimed at relieving congestion on motorways and trunk roads.

Road Safety

13. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he is taking to improve road safety.

Mr. Channon: We are now saving 560 lives a year, compared with the position two years ago when I set our overall target.

We have today launched a new campaign against drinking and driving, using fresh TV commercials and publicity material. The basic message remains that "drinking and driving wrecks lives".

British Rail Branch Line Services

15. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the future of British Rail branch line services.

Mr. Portillo: We receive a variety of representations about such services.

Channel Tunnel

17. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the carriage of freight on the rail link from the Channel tunnel through London.

Mr. Portillo: We have received many representations about the importance of rail freight traffic through the Channel tunnel. We have also received representations about the railway lines which British Rail proposes to use to carry this traffic. This is a matter for the board. It is not its current intention to use the proposed new rail link between London and the tunnel for heavy freight trains.

33. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the carriage of freight on the rail link from the Channel tunnel through London.

Mr. Portillo: We have received many representations about the importance of rail freight traffic through the Channel tunnel. We have also received representations about the railway lines which British Rail proposes to use to carry this traffic. This is a matter for the board. It is not its current intention to use the proposed rail link between London and the tunnel for heavy freight trains.

Drink-Driving

19. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give figures showing the months of the year with the highest incidence of drinking and driving; and if he will explain the reasons underlying the Department of Transport's campaign strategy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A good indicator of drink-driving patterns is the number of death and injury accidents involving drivers over the legal limit. These tend to peak in the summer as the monthly figures for 1987 (the latest complete year available) show.

That is why we are today launching a summer drink-drive campaign with two new TV commercials, to complement the regular Christmas campaigns.

The monthly figures are as follows:

Accidents involving death or personal injury where the driver or rider had a blood or alcohol level above the legal limit—1987

	Number
January	680
February	740
March	880
April	890
May	1,140
June	1,050
July	1,060
August	1,100
September	970
October	1,030
November	1,020
December	970

23. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the role low and non-alcoholic drinks have to play in the campaign against drinking and driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The continuing rapid growth in the demand for non-alcoholic and low-alcoholic drinks (NABLABS) show that they are attractive alternatives for the driver as well as others. This sector of the drinks industry has doubled each year over the last two years. NABLABS mean that no driver has any excuse at all for drinking and driving. There is always an attractive alternative drink available in pubs and clubs. These should be in restaurants, too. Private hosts should ensure the same is true when they entertain.

"Roads for Prosperity"

20. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding his White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity".

Mr. Channon: I have received many representations about "Roads for Prosperity". Most express strong support.

London Underground (Automatic Barriers)

21. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with the chairman of London Underground Ltd., the current installation of automatic ticket barriers.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend met Mr. Newton on 18 May, when the Underground ticketing system was discussed, among other matters.

East Coast Infrastructure

22. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has made an assessment of the transport infrastructure requirements of the east coast of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend announced in "Roads for Prosperity" major improvements to the A1 and other trunk roads in eastern England resulting from our detailed assessment of trunk road needs. It is respectively for British Rail, local authorities and port authorities to assess the need for investment in rail, local roads, airports and ports.

Transport Policy (Environmental Considerations)

24. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to promote environmental considerations in transport policy.

Mr. Channon: Environmental considerations figure prominently in the development of transport policy. We have recently produced a booklet "Transport and the Environment", which describes our action in this area.

In the key area of vehicle emission standards, my noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside reached agreement last week with our European partners on much stricter limits for small cars. These will take mandatory effect from 1992.

Volunteer Drivers

25. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made on the EEC directive proposing to restrict the use of volunteer drivers in the use of vehicles for disabled people owned by charities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are continuing to press the European Commission at every level to avoid placing unnecessary restrictions on the drivers of minibuses. Formal discussion of the directive among member states is not expected to start before the autumn. The proposal would have the effect of reducing mobility without improving safety.

Pollution

26. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he will take to reduce pollution from motor vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall be consulting soon on draft regulations to implement the standards which were agreed last year in the European Community for cars, buses and goods vehicles.

My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside reached agreement last week with our European partners on much stricter limits for small cars. These will take mandatory effect from 1992.

Roads Programme

27. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what detailed studies of the comparative cost advantages of road and rail access to major cities he carried out before announcing his latest roads programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The relative market shares of road and rail mean that even a 50 per cent. increase in rail travel would be equivalent to less than 5 per cent. of road traffic. Against this background, the Government concluded that the way to tackle congestion on inter-urban roads is by widening existing roads and building new roads, as proposed in "Roads for Prosperity".

37. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much expenditure will have been increased since 1979 on the trunk road and motorway network when his new expanded roads programme is completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government are committed to the greatly expanded road programme announced in "Roads for Prosperity". This will require increased annual expenditure which will be determined in future public expenditure surveys. Capital expenditure on roads has increasd by some 60 per cent. in real terms between 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the planned current and capital spending on national and local roads for the next three years, at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures for current and capital expenditure on national and local roads in Great Britain for the period sought, at 1987-88 prices as shown in the table.

£ million in 1987-88 prices

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
National roads
Current	117	105	112
Capital	1,138	1,384	1,384
Local roads
Current	1,639	1,627	1,628
Capital	778	738	750

Structural maintenance on national roads is classified as capital expenditure, but on local roads local authorities treat it largely as current expenditure.

British Rail (Privatisation)

28. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the report prepared for his Department by Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, entitled, "Study of Structural Options for Railway Privatisation."

Mr. Channon: No. Deloitte, Haskins and Sells was not asked to make recommendations or reach conclusions: its study for the Department and British Rail consists of a set of working papers which will form a basis for further studies. They contain commercially confidential information and would be unsuitable for publication.

If a decision is taken to privatise British Rail, I shall publish the Government's conclusions in due course.

Rail Transport

29. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to encourage the use of rail transport.

Mr. Portillo: We consider that travellers and freight consigners should generally be free to make their own choices between different means of transport, in the light of their relative cost and quality. The Government's chief concern is to ensure that each means of transport can operate efficiently, provide services linked closely to customer demand, and compete on equal terms.

Safety Inspections

30. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in transferring safety inspections to regulatory bodies such as Lloyd's.

Mr. Portillo: Most statutory survey work has already been delegated to approved classification societies. The issue of delegation is kept under continuous review.

Railways (Select Committee Report)

31. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received urging him to seek a debate on the report of the Transport Select Committee on the future of the railways.

Mr. Portillo: The last report of the Transport Select Committee concerned with railways was on the financing of rail services, to which the Government responded in March 1988. We have received no representations for a debate on this report.

East London Assessment Study

32. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the east London assessment study; and when he plans to publish the consultants' report.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received representations on various aspects of this assessment study from the London local authority associations, the London planning advisory committee, individual local authorities, national organisations with an interest in transport matters, amenity groups, residents associations, various other bodies, and members of the public.

The consultants are expected to report in the summer. Their report will be published as soon as possible.

South-East Wales (Road Link)

34. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the possibility of using the former Severn tunnel junction site to provide a road-rail link to south-east Wales.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is currently examining, in consultation with local interests, possible sites for road-rail freight terminals in planning for future channel tunnel freight services. Its proposals will be set out in the plan which it has to produce by the end of this year under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Streetworks (Horne Report)

35. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to introduce legislation on the Horne report on streetworks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As soon as there is a suitable opportunity. Detailed proposals have been prepared and an opportunity is currently being given to interested parties to comment on them.

Street Lighting

36. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the expenditure in real terms on local authority street lighting in the last three financial years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures for current and capital expenditure by local authorities in Great Britain on public highways lighting at current prices are estimated to have been as follows:

	£ million
1986-87	235
1987-88	230

Figures for expenditure in 1988-89 are not yet available.

British Rail

38. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman and the board of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail on 11 July.

London Underground (Cabling)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will call for a report from the chairman of London Regional Transport ascertaining when it is planned that all PVC cable on the London Underground will be replaced by low smoke zero halogen cable; and if he will provide a special grant from Her Majesty's Government to speed up this replacement programme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chairman of London Regional Transport to ascertain how many electricians are employed on the London Underground; how many are involved in fitting and maintaining cable underground; how many are fully working on the LSZH programme; and if he will provide a special grant from Her Majesty's Government to London Underground Ltd. for the employment of more electricians; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what assessment he has made of the implications for safety of potential toxicity and thick smoke resulting from a fire of (a) PVC cabling and (b) arcing cables, on the London Underground.

Mr Portillo: The assessment of safety on the Underground is in the first instance a matter for London Underground Ltd. I understand that the Underground stopped installing PVC cable some five years ago and that a replacement programme is under way.

London Underground Ltd. and its consultants are now reconsidering the priorities within this programme, using hazard analysis techniques. The railway inspectorate is being kept fully informed.

Arcing occurs when the cable insulation fails. The risk can be reduced by ensuring that the circuit breakers provided to detect arcing and switch off the power are maintained in the correct setting.

The numbers and deployment of electricians are management matters for London Underground Ltd. It is for LUL to determine appropriate staffing levels in the light of LRT's statutory duty to have due regard to efficiency, economy and safety of operation. The costs involved will be taken into account in the annual discussions of LRT's financing requirements.

Seat Belts (Children)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is proposing that children aged one to three years should be required to use adult seat belts where no more suitable restraint is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This issue was discussed in our consultation document "Rear Seat Belt Wearing by Children". Most experts were against making it a legal requirement that very young children must be restrained in adult belts when appropriate child restraints are not available. We will take this into account in preparing the regulations which we plan to bring before Parliament for approval very shortly.

No responsible parents should wait for the law before properly restraining their children in the car.

Commercial Vehicles (Emissions)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce new statutory standards based on the mass of emissions from commercial vehicles and backed by regular roadside checks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall consult interested parties shortly on draft regulations to introduce the limits on the mass of gaseous emissions as set by Community directive 88/77/EEC. The Commission is expected to propose a second stage of limits later this year, which will also include a mass emission limit for particulates.

The Department has over the past two years substantially increased its programme of roadside checks on the condition of heavy goods vehicles. This includes a check on smoke emissions. We are considering how future emission standards might most effectively be enforced.

Air Safety

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the implementation of the recommendations made following the Manchester aircraft disaster in 1985 that seats in rows adjacent to the overwing emergency exit should be removed, and that the width in the gap in the forward galley partition should be increased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The statutory responsibility for the regulation of air transport safety lies with the Civil Aviation Authority. I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the chairman of the CAA and have asked him to write to the hon. Member direct.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This depends upon matters under discussion.

Offshore Supply Vessels

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to ensure that all offshore supply vessels operating in the British zone of the North sea under foreign flags are manned to levels compatible with those laid down by his Department for United Kingdom registered vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo Manning levels on foreign flag offshore supply vessels are checked in the course of port state control inspections and confirmed to be in accordance with the safe manning certificate issued by the flag state.

London Underground (Safety Management)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to tackle urgently the problem of lack of effective leadership in safety management of the London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 23 May at columns 502-3.

Roads (Suffolk and Norfolk)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about roads in Suffolk and Norfolk following publication of the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of generally favourable representations, including some from my hon. Friend.

A12 (Lowestoft-Ipswich)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what timetable he envisages for workings on the A12 Lowestoft-Ipswich, following publication of the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not yet set a timetable for these improvements. The first step is to appoint design agents. This will be done in the coming months. A roads report will be issued later this year, setting out the expanded road programme in detail.

Teesport (Coal Discharge)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the country of origin of the coal discharged at Teesport by the MM Ave between 7 and 13 May; and at which port it was loaded.

Mr. Portillo: The origin of the Ave's cargo is not known, but I understand it was loaded at Maputo, Mozambique. The country of origin of a cargo is not a matter which is relevant to the responsibilities of the Department.

Shetland (Fishing Boat-Submarine Collision)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about a collision between a Norwegian fishing boat and a French Agousta class submarine off Shetland on Monday 22 May; what inquiries have been carried out into the collision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: During the afternoon of 22 May Her Majesty's Coastguard rescue centre in Aberdeen received a report that the nets of the Norwegian trawler Strand Senior had been fouled by a French submarine. The Coastguard established that the trawler was in no danger.

The reported position of the incident was 40 miles north north west of Unst and thus well outside United Kingdom territorial waters. Any further investigation is therefore for the French and Norwegian authorities.

Fylde Coast (Easterly Bypass)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the consulting engineer's report on the proposed Fylde coast easterly bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Fylde coast easterly bypass is one of the options being considered for linking the M55 to the A585 at Norcross. We expect to receive the consultant's report in the autumn.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's total capital investment in air traffic control for the next decade.

Mr. Channon: The Civil Aviation Authority has said that it plans to invest approximately £600 million in air traffic control-related projects over the next decade.

Vale of Rheidol Railway

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now give the net price received by British Rail for the sale of the Vale of Rheidol railway to the Brecon Mountain Railway Company.

Mr. Portillo: The price paid to British Rail for the sale of the Vale of Rheidol railway to the Brecon Mountain Railway Company was £306,500.

Vehicle Excise Reminder Forms

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to include private advertising material with the V11 vehicle excise duty forms issued by the DVLC in Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: This is an idea that has been considered on a number of occasions. There are no present plans to take it further.

Road Bridges (Strengthening)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who will be responsible for meeting the full costs incurred in strengthening Britain's road bridges in order to cope with the introduction of 40-tonne lorries.

Mr. Channon: The relevant highway authority.

Exeter (Northern Bypass)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the proposal to construct a northern bypass for Exeter from the M5 originated in a proposal put to his Department by Devon county council as the highway authority;

(2) whether the proposal to construct a northern bypass for Exeter from the M5 is a scheme originating in his Department, without consultation with, or the approval of, Devon county council.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A northern bypass of Exeter was first mooted when alternative routes for the M5 were under investigation in the mid-1960s. This work was updated before my right hon. Friend decided to include the scheme in "Roads for Prosperity". Devon county council passed a resolution last year requesting the addition of an Exeter northern bypass to the programme.

Air Transport (Safety of Materials)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation his Department has made of the safety of air transport of (a) plutonium metal, (b) plutonium dioxide powder, (c) isotopes of enriched uranium and (d) radio isotopes for nuclear and industrial uses.

Mr. Channon: The transport of such materials has been studied by the advisory committee on the safe transport of radioactive materials (ACTRAM). The results have been published in two reports: "The Transport of Radioactive Materials for Medical and Industrial Use" and "The Transport of Civil Plutonium by Air". Copies of both reports have been placed in the Library.

Enriched uranium, being potentially less hazardous than plutonium, does not call for a separate study.

SCOTLAND

Southern General Hospital (X-ray Department)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of staff of the X-ray department at the Southern general hospital have suffered health problems as a result of excessive chemical fumes arising out of the X-ray process.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the Greater Glasgow health board, but I understand from the board that following health screening, three members of staff were identified as having allergic sensitivity to the chemicals used in the X-ray processing.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations have been carried out to determine whether an excess of chemical fumes exists or existed in the X-ray department of the Southern general hospital; what were the findings; when they were made known to management; what recommendations were made; and what remedial action has been taken.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the Greater Glasgow health board, but I understand from the board that in May and December 1988 two reports on the emission of chemical fumes in X-ray departments were produced by the board's occupational health department and by the Health and Safety Executive respectively. On both occasions the concentrations in the atmosphere of the substances measured were found to be well within the current occupational exposure limits. As a result of its own investigations and the recommendations of the Health and Safety Executive, a number of measures including better ventilation have been introduced by the health board to improve the working conditions in the departments concerned.

Medical Education and Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has given to the observations and criticisms of the Medical Research Council on the White Paper, "Working for Patients", regarding medical (a) education and (b) research in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The comments of the Medical Research Council on the White Paper have been acknowledged and are being considered along with the many responses received from other bodies. They will be taken into account in the implementation of the White Paper proposals in Scotland.

Chlorine

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding levels of chlorine in public water supplies in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Detailed information on levels of chlorine in public water supplies in Scotland is not held centrally. Water put into supply normally has a level of residual chlorine of 0·1-0·5 mg per litre according to circumstances.

Effluent Standards

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those applications made to him in the current year by water authorities for the lowering of effluent standards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no applications from the islands councils for a lowering of standards for their discharges during the current year. On the mainland, standards are set by the river purification boards which are responsible for giving consents to discharge effluent in their areas.

Guest Houses (Rating)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many guest houses in (a) Scotland and (b) Argyll and Bute will be liable to pay both non-domestic rates and the personal community charge for everyone who lives on the premises.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally. Where, however a person is solely or mainly resident in premises which are subject to non-domestic rates, there is a reduction in the valuation for rating of the property to take account of this.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's estimate of the average difference for owners of guest houses in Scotland between the previous rating system and the current system whereby owners of guest houses catering for more than six people are liable to pay both non-domestic rates and the personal community charge for everyone living on the premises.

Mr. Lang: The information that would be required to carry out an estimate of the kind envisaged by the hon. Member is not held centrally.

Community Charge

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider exempting from liability for the standard community charge accommodation which is unoccupied and where the person who would otherwise be liable for payment is registered elsewhere for the purpose of undertaking a full-time course of education.

Mr. Lang: No. Students in this position and who cannot reasonably be expected to give up their homes on moving to another area for educational purposes may be eligible for a two homes allowance which is payable by the Scottish Education Department as an addition to the student grant.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce : To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table for each district council in Scotland of the total yield of the community charge payment by the districts to the region in the current financial year.

Mr. Lang: The figures given in the table are the estimated yield in 1989-90 to the relevant regional councils of community charge payments made by residents and standard community charge payers within each of the districts of Scotland.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, further to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 515, he will seek and evaluate estimates from the Scottish Fishermen's Federation and the Scottish Fishermen's Organisation on the impact on Scottish fleet costs in a full year of a 5 per cent. interest rate rise.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have already noted the estimate of £7·5 million which the hon. Member has quoted and which may have been provided by the Scottish Fishermen's Federation. As I indicated previously, many elements affect the impact of individual cost charges on overall profitability. My noble Friend the Minister of State will meet representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation tomorrow to discuss a paper which the federation submitted to him.

Mrs. Sinclair (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which media outlets were notified by the Scottish Office of the home visit by the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) to Mrs. Sinclair on Sunday 14 May; what advance notice of press involvement was given to Mrs. Sinclair; and what were the costs to public funds.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish information office arranged for media representatives to be told of the visit of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for health and education to the home of Mrs. Margaret Sinclair and issued a press statement on my hon. Friend's behalf. The statement was sent to the Glasgow Herald, Scotsman, the Daily Record, the Scottish Daily Express, the Aberdeen Press and Journal, the Dundee Courier, Scottish Television, the BBC, Radio Forth and Radio Clyde.

No advance notice of press involvement was given to Mrs. Sinclair.

The total cost to public funds is estimated at approximately £40.

Correspondence

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to respond to the letter of 19 April from the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye on matters of concern to shellfish growers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister of State responded on 5 June to the letter of 19 April from the hon. Member on matters of concern to shellfish growers.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the Property Services Agency policy whereby 1 per cent. of the capital expenditure on major building projects is devoted to an arts involvement to include the capital programmes of local authorities.

Mr. Lang: No. It is for local authorities to determine their expenditure priorities within the resources my right hon. and learned Friend makes available to them.

Regions (Rates)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total yield from the rate payment to the regions for the last financial year.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Estimated total rate income 1988-89

	£ million
Borders	22·7
Central	86·1
Dumfries and Galloway	35·9
Fife	124·8
Grampian	156·9
Highland	60·0
Lothian	290·4
Strathclyde	740·0
Tayside	114·2
Islands Councils
Orkney	9·1
Shetland	50·4
Western Isles	6·7
Total regions and islands	1,697·2

Notes:

1. Rate income is less Domestic Rate Relief.
2. Estimated figures calculated using actual penny rate products, rateable values and rate poundages from "Rating Review".
3. Figures exclude rates collected by the Regions on behalf of the District Councils.

NHS Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends publishing a list of hospitals and other medical units that have expressed an interest in becoming self governing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards in Scotland have not yet been asked to invite from hospitals and other units expressions of interest in self-governing status. I shall be discussing this with health board chairmen later this month. I then intend to make rapid progress in identifying those hospitals and so on that wish to consider becoming self-governing. In the meantime, I have received a number of informal expressions of interest.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his Department's role in proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" as they affect (a) teaching hospitals, (b) academic research, (c) student teaching and (d) academic departments of general practice.

Mr. Jackson: Development of the proposals in the Cm 555 is for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health. However, the inter-relationship with education provision is recognised by close working between our two Departments, particularly through a steering group which also includes representatives of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and other bodies with an interest in medical and dental education.

Medical Curriculum

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to make health promotion a mandatory part of the medical curriculum.

Mr. Jackson: This topic is already covered by the recommendations on basic medical education made by the education committee of the General Medical Council in the light of which medical schools determine the content of their courses.

Voluntary Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many bids for funding were received from voluntary schools in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A total of 365 bids for major capital projects were received in respect of voluntary schools during the financial year 1988-89 for approval to start in 1989-90.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many bids from voluntary schools were successful in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A total of 53 projects were approved for a 1989-90 start.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total amount of money allocated to voluntary schools in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A total of £86·1 million for 1989-90.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total amount of money bid for by the voluntary schools in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The 365 bids for capital projects submitted in respect of voluntary schools in 1988-89 totalled £164,889,000, of which £85,841,000 was for expenditure in 1989-90.

Under-Fives (Curriculum)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the organisations invited to submit evidence to the committee examining the curriculum for the under-fives.

Mrs. Rumbold: When the committee inquiring into the content of the educational experience of under-fives was established, I issued a general invitation to any interested party to submit written evidence or opinion.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place the submissions made to the committees considering the curriculum for under-fives in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: Most organisations submitting evidence are making their submissions public. I shall ask the committee to consider whether any additional measures to keep the House informed would be desirable.

Hazel Court School, Eastbourne

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the responsibilities of the East Sussex county council to provide speech therapy and physiotherapy for those children who need those services at Hazel Court school, Eastbourne.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Responsibility for the provision of speech therapy and physiotherapy services has rested with health authorities since the reorganisation of the National Health Service in 1974. Although an amendment to the Education Act 1981 contained in the Education Reform Act 1988 enables local education authorities, such as East Sussex, to provide non-educational provision, (which includes speech therapy and physiotherapy) for children with statements of special educational needs, this has not affected health authorities' general responsibilities.

Local education authorities will be aware that the recent High Court case of R v Lancashire county council ex parte CM ruled that speech therapy could be considered as either educational or non-educational provision.

Student Awards

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students pursuing degree courses in nursing in the current academic year are in receipt of local education authority mandatory awards.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected centrally.

Nursing (Degree Courses)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those educational establishments offering degree courses in nursing, giving the number of such places offered by each for the current academic year.

Mr. Jackson: I will write to the hon. Member.

Top-up Loans

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the data used to construct chart 7 on page 11 of "Top-up Loans for Students" (Cm. 520).

Mr. Jackson: The data underlying the chart were as follows:

Average gross annual earnings of working males aged 30-39

Year	Earnings of male graduates £	Earnings of all working males £
1979	7,909	5,728
1980	9,119	6,931
1981	10,876	7,867
1982	11,822	8,264
1983	13,374	9,220
1984	14,589	9,814
1985	13,864	10,575

Source: General Household Surveys 1979-1985.

Institute of Food Research

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what projections he has made for staffing levels in the Institute of Food Research.

Mr. Jackson: None. This is a matter for the Agricultural and Food Research Council which has responsibility for the Institute of Food Research.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the future of the Institute of Food Research laboratories at Bristol.

Mr. Jackson: The management of the Institute of Food Research and the timing of any announcement is a matter for the Agricultural and Food Research Council.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Reform

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the cost to the public purse of implementing the Green Papers on the legal profession.

The Attorney-General: The Green Papers set out proposals for the elimination of rules in the legal profession which may not be necessary in order to ensure standards of competence and conduct. The question, therefore, in relation to any particular rule is whether it is necessary for this purpose. If a rule is not necessary for this purpose its elimination is not likely to increase cost.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General what response he is making to the Coopers and Lybrand report assessing the increase of the cost to the Exchequer of extending rights of audience in the high courts to solicitors in standard fee legal aid cases from £9·8 million to £17·7 million.

The Attorney-General: All the submissions made to the Lord Chancellor on the Green Papers are now being carefully considered, with a view to a response being made before the summer recess. The Lord Chancellor has, however, received a supplementary response from the Law Society which suggests that, contrary to the contentions in the Coopers and Lybrand report, for many straightforward Crown court cases it would be cheaper if a solicitor carried out the advocacy personally rather than employing a barrister.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Securities and Investment Board

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to receive the annual report of the Securities and Investments board for the year ended 31 March 1989; and if he will take steps to bring forward a motion for the House to take note of the report.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend received the Securities and Investments board's annual report for the year ended 31 March 1989 on 5 June and copies of it were laid before Parliament on 6 June. The question of a debate on a motion taking note of the report is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House.

Timber (European Parliament Scheme)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy towards the scheme approved by the European Parliament which would help nations producing tropical timber to move towards sustainable forest management within five years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 8 June at column 368.

WALES

Hospitals (Self-Government)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends publishing a list of medical units that have expressed an interest in becoming self-governing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I have asked the chairmen of Welsh health authorities to inform me of discussions that they are having on this subject with the hospitals.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospitals in Wales have so far expressed interest in self-governing status.

Mr. Grist: None so far, but I have asked the chairmen of Welsh health authorities to inform me of any discussions that they have with hospitals on this subject.

General Practice Budgets

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner practices in Wales have expressed interest to date in establishing their own practice budgets.

Mr. Grist: No practice has yet made a formal approach. This is what I would expect since I and Welsh Office officials have yet to complete our discussions with a range of interested parties in Wales, on the implementation of the proposals set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

ENERGY

"Climate in Crisis"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department will seek to obtain a video cassette and transcript of the BBC2 nature series special programme "Climate in Crisis" broadcast on 5 June.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department has a copy of the BBC2 programme "Climate in Crisis".

Nuclear Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority reactors Dido and Lido at the Atomic Energy Research Establishment were (a) nominated on the facilities list of nuclear plants open to safeguards and (b) first visited by safeguards inspectors; and if the reactors have ever been withdrawn from safeguards.

Mr. Parkinson: The DIDO reactor at AERE Harwell has never been nominated for the facilities list. The LIDO reactor was shut down in 1974 and therefore never included on the United Kingdom facilities list.

Thorp Project

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in view of the lack of confidence expressed by the Central Electricity Generating Board in reprocessing spent fuel from advanced gas cooled reactors at Sellafield, and of the Central Electricity Generating Board's plans to build alternative dry storage facilities at Heysham, he will reconsider the Thorp project; and whether, if cancellation costs are not prohibitive, he will take a decision now to cancel Thorp.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The future of THORP is already assured. British Nuclear Fuels plc has contracts valued at some £4 billion and is negotiating with utilities in the Federal Republic of Germany for additional contracts, worth some £1·6 billion, which will help to guarantee the future of the plant well into the next century. The decision on whether to submit a planning application for a dry buffer store at Heysham is a matter for the CEGB.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Credit Corporation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Agricultural Credit Corporation.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Decisions on the future of the Agricultural Credit Corporation, which is a private company limited by guarantee, are for the board of the corporation.

Under the provisions of section 64 of the Agriculture Act 1967 Government support was provided in respect of guarantees given by the corporation on bank loans for agricultural and horticultural businesses. These powers expired on 31 March 1989.

I have been reviewing the need for a continuation of such powers and have concluded that it is no longer appropriate for the Government to continue making special provision for this sector.

The Government take the view that public funds for bank loan guarantees should be targeted at those who do not have the necessary security or track record to obtain bank loans through the commercial market and yet have the potential for increasing national prosperity and the generation of additional employment. The Government are, however, considering the feasibility of whether the loan guarantee scheme operated by the Department of Employment, which helps small firms which would otherwise not be able to obtain finance, can be extended to include small firms in agriculture and horticulture.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the procedure for slaughterhouses catering solely for the domestic meat market, to have a pre-veterinery inspection, as for export-licensed slaughterhouses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have already announced my intention to introduce ante-mortem inspection in non-exporting abattoirs by 1 January 1991 to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 13 March 1989 at column 84. I have also decided that we should move towards a single set of rules for all slaughterhouses producing meat for human consumption. Discussions with the Commission and other member states on the arrangements which are to operate in the single market after 1992 will have a bearing on the implementation of this decision and its timing. I shall be discussing the issues with those in this country who have an interest.

Food Research Projects

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those food research projects which are financed by his Ministry.

Mr. Ryder: Last year the Ministry funded 436 research projects on food. Details can be found in the draft "National Programme of Food R & D 1988/89", a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had concerning the research priorities of the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

Mr. Ryder: My Department is in regular contact with the Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC) at all levels. Moreover, my chief scientific adviser and the Secretary of the AFRC are both members of the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food which advises United Kingdom Agriculture Ministers and the chairman of the AFRC on priorities in research and development in agriculture and food.

BSE

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to take any further action in the light of the Southwood report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government have already taken wide-ranging action to deal with this new disease problem and has acted on all the recommendations made by the Southwood working party which was set up to look at all aspects of the disease, including any human health implications.

Although the Southwood working party regarded the risk to humans as remote, the Government acted on its recommendation that, as a precautionary measure, all cattle suspected as having BSE should be slaughtered and destroyed to take them out of the food chain.

As a matter of extreme prudence, the Southwood working party also suggested that certain offals should not be used in the manufacture of baby foods. We established in February that these offals are not in fact currently used by baby food manufacturers. In order to provide even more reassurance to the public, I indicated then that we would bring forward regulations to ensure that there is no possibility of their use in the future.

In working out the details, I have concluded that a better way of dealing with this would be to ensure that the relevant types of bovine offals should be rejected at slaughterhouses for all cattle so that they cannot be used for human consumption in any way. These offals, which include brain, spinal cord, thymus, spleen and tonsils, will have to be stained in the slaughterhouse and disposed of under conditions similar to those applying to unfit meat. This approach also deals with a separate problem, namely, ensuring that if there is any risk that there are cattle incubating the disease but not showing clinical symptoms which are not being slaughtered and destroyed, their offals do not enter the food chain either.

Detailed proposals for regulations under the Food Act implementing this change will be issued for consultation, as required by the Act, very shortly.

Untreated Milk

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now able to announce his decision on future sales of untreated milk.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and for Wales and I are grateful to the very large number of individuals and organisations—over 1,200 in all—who responded to our consultation paper on untreated milk.

The proposal for a ban on sales of untreated milk was supported by the enforcement authorities and by a number of other organisations, mainly those concerned with public health. Organisations and individuals representing producer interests were opposed to a ban. But the main volume of correspondence came from organisations and individuals representing consumers, the overwhelming majority of whom were also opposed to a ban. Their arguments were:

—they preferred to drink untreated milk, in spite of the additional health risks which this might involve; and —in accordance with the Government's general philosophy, they should be allowed to decide for themselves whether or not to continue drinking untreated milk.

Having carefully considered the representations which have been made—and in particular the large number received from individuals—my right hon. Friends and I have concluded that the consumer view should prevail. We therefore propose to continue to allow sales of untreated milk. But we recognise that this would continue to present a degree of public health risk, which we are anxious to do what we reasonably can to minimise. We are accordingly proposing that in future:

—untreated milk should be more fully labelled, so that the consumer knows that it has not been heat-treated and may contain harmful organisms;

—it should be subject to more sophisticated tests, which will have to be reflected in higher milk and dairies charges for producers; and

—the procedure under regulation 20 of the Milk and Dairies (General) Regulations 1959 should be simplified to facilitate the issue of heat treatment orders in cases where untreated milk constitutes a threat to health.

Proposals for regulations will be issued shortly to interested parties in the usual way and will indicate the time scale for the various changes proposed. I recognise that new labelling requirements in particular cannot be introduced overnight.

The consultation document also sought views on untreated cream and on cheese made from untreated milk. In both cases there appears to be a need for more informative labelling and I shall be considering this in the light of our Community obligations. Action on goat and sheep milk must await the necessary primary legislation, but prima facie there is a case for making these milks subject to the same rules as cows milk.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Central America

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is provided by the United Kingdom to Central America; and what form it takes, giving figures for each year since 1985 and drawing a distinction between aid provided for reconstruction following the recent hurricane, and other aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest figures for Central America are as follows. They include investment by the Commonwealth Development Corporation but do not take account of joint funding provided to non-governmental organisations.

Gross bilateral aid to Central America 1985-88 in current prices.

£ thousands

	1985	1986	1987	[1]1988
Costa Rica	12,685	10,038	2,584	991
El Salvador	103	239	411	154
Guatemala	0	10	1	4
Honduras	3,653	1,258	811	1,201
Nicaragua	116	86	0	180
Panama	67	70	72	988

[1]Provisional.

This aid is in the form of technical cooperation, apart from (a) investment by the Commonwealth Development Corporation, which was as follows:

£ thousands

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Costa Rica	12,389	9,516	2,228	258
El Salvador	—	—	—	—
Guatemala	—	—	—	—
Honduras	2,967	500	—	—
Nicaragua	—	—	—	—
Panama	—	—	—	—

(b) £20,000 provided to Costa Rica and £180,000 to Nicaragua in 1988 for relief measures following Hurricane Joan; further relief aid was provided in 1989.

(c) Capital aid to the following countries:

£ thousands

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Honduras	164	271	241	615
Panama	—	—	—	854

The capital aid to Panama was provided under the aid and trade provision.

Oxfam

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of grant provided by Her Majesty's Government to Oxfam each year since 1985.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is maintained by financial year rather than calendar year. Our total financial support to Oxfam for the past four financial years, including disaster and refugee aid as well as long-term development projects, was:

1985-86	6,642,014
1986-87	3,951,154
1987-88	5,741,378
1988-89	8,553,027

Cambodia and Nicaragua

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the attitude of Her Majesty's Government to Cambodia and Nicaragua so far as Oxfam funding is concerned; and if pound for pound funding applies to these two countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are prepared to consider, under the joint funding scheme, proposals from Oxfam and other agencies for co-funding specific development projects in Nicaragua and specific projects with humanitarian goals in Cambodia.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds have so far been made available under the European Community's regional or other initiatives to encourage the economic development of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Falkland Islands have been allocated project aid under the last three European development funds totalling 1·578 million ecu. They have also been allocated nearly 0·5 million ecu in the form of emergency aid, Stabex transfers and risk capital.

PRIME MINISTER

Teesside (Visit)

Q25. Mr. Holt: To ask the Prime Minister if, on a future Friday or Monday, she will accompany the Secretary of State for Transport and the hon. Member for Langbaurgh by normal family car on an official journey from London to Teesside.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so, but I know that the proposals announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" will do much to improve such a journey.

EC Commission (Powers)

Q184. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the issue of the Commission submitting proposals which empower officers of the Commission to enter business premises to demand information and to impose fines; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any such new proposals which are currently under consideration.

Defence

Q198. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the defence of the nation.

Q199. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the defence of the nation.

Q200. Mr. Cook: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the defence of the nation.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations from individuals and organisations.

Conventional Arms Reductions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she is prepared to include British land-based aircraft in the negotiations for conventional arms reductions in Europe.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on a timetable for a conventional arms agreement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 17 of the declaration of the Heads of State and Government participating in the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Brussels, 29-30 May 1989, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Short-range Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects negotiations on reductions in short-range nuclear weapons in Europe to begin.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on Tuesday 6 June 1989 at column 20.

Disarmament

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what contribution Her Majesty's Government are prepared to make to the achievement of common security and negotiated disarmament.

The Prime Minister: The two documents issued by last month's NATO summit meeting (the summit declaration and the comprehensive concept paper, both of which have been placed in the Library of the House) set out NATO's objectives for improving our security through arms control. As I made clear in my statement to the House on 6 June, we played a full part in drawing up these documents, and will continue to play a full part in pursuing the objectives set out in them.

Publicity

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister where responsibility will lie for ensuring that the terms of the new guidance on conventions on Government publicity issued by the Cabinet Office will be fully observed; what disciplinary system has been put in place to ensure that any breaches of the guidance are effectively punished; and whether any grades of official or specific post-holders are exempt from the requirements of the new guidance.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for ensuring that the conventions on Government publicity are fully observed rests with individual Ministers and their Departments. Ministers are answerable to the House for the actions of their Departments in relation to publicity as to other matters. Officials are subject to the general principles of conduct governing civil servants.

Engagements

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 June.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 June.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 June.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today including one with former President Reagan.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NATO Summit

92. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit in Brussels on 29 and 30 May.

93. Mr. Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit in Brussels on 29 and 30 May.

94. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit in Brussels on 29 and 30 May.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement to the House on 6 June.

Gibraltar

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library his recent correspondence with the hon. Member for Linlithgow about the Gibraltar shootings.

Mr. Waldegrave: With his permission, I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of my written reply of 25 May to the hon. Member for Linlithgow and also copies of other correspondence between us on the Gibraltar shootings. Hon. Members may wish to note that, in addition to these letters, the Library now has copies of the Spanish police officer's statement of 8 August 1988 on Spanish surveillance activities prior to the shootings on 6 March 1988; the attestation before a Malaga court on 9 August of the Spanish police officer's signature; and the attestation before a Malaga court on 22 August of the Gibraltar coroner's officer's signature on that statement. There is also a copy of the English translation of the Spanish police officer's statement prepared by the Gibraltar coroner's officer and a professional commentary on that translation prepared by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's own translators.

Refugee Camps (Cambodia)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied that all refugee camps in Cambodia are open to free inspection by the United Nations authorities.

Mr. Eggar: The relevant United Nations agencies do not have proper access to camps administered by the Khmer Rouge. We have taken a leading role with the Thai Government and with the United Nations agencies in attempting to secure such access. The agencies have good access to other camps.

Nicaragua (Drugs)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence exists to show a link between drug-growing and trafficking and the civil administration in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: The Nicaraguan Government have denied allegations of high level Government involvement in trafficking.

Cambodia

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations about the United Nations seat for Cambodia, currently occupied by a representative of the Pol Pot regime.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) on 5 December 1988 at column 40.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the implications for the Falkland Islands of the Single European Act and related European agreements.

Mr. Eggar: The relationship between the Falkland Islands and the European Economic Community is governed by part four of the Treaty of Rome and Council decision 86/283/EEC on the association of overseas countries and territories with the EEC. These provisions are not affected by the Single European Act.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any meetings with representatives of the Falkland Islands administration concerning the impact upon the islands of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Grants and Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what levels of grant-in-aid or research contract have been awarded in 1988-89 to (i) the Royal Institute of International Affairs, (ii) the Royal United Services Institute, (iii) the United Nation Association, (iv) Peace through NATO, (v) the Trilateral Commission, (vi) the British Atlantic Committee, (vii) the North Atlantic Assembly, (viii) the Arms Control Association, (ix) the Verification Technology Information Centre and (x) the European Proliferation Information Centre, from departmental funds.

Mr. Eggar: In the 1988-89 financial year the Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave the following amounts in either grants-in-aid or research contracts to the organisations listed:

(i)	Royal Institute for International Affairs	45,390
(ii)	The Royal United Services Institute	Nil
(iii)	The United Nations Association	24,000
(iv)	Peace Through NATO	113,000
(v)	The Trilateral Commission	2,250
(vi)	The British Atlantic Committee	59,000
(vii)	The North Atlantic Assembly	432,569
(viii)	The Arms Control Association	Nil
(ix)	The Verification Technology Information Centre	Nil
(x)	The European Proliferation Information Centre	Nil

Non-Governmental Organisations (Grants)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which non-governmental organisations have received grants-in-aid in regard to their work done to explain arms control and defence issues; how much funding each from his Department such non-governmental organisation received in 1987-88 and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for allocating departmental funds to these organisations.

Mr. Eggar: In 1987-88 and 1988-89 the following organisations received grants-in-aid from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office specifically in regard to their work done to explain arms control and defence issues:

	1987-88 £	1988-89 £
(i) British Atlantic Committee	57,500	59,000
(ii) Peace Through NATO	110,000	113,000
(iii) The Atlantic Treaty Association	Nil	2,000
(iv) North Atlantic Assembly	271,000	432,569

The grants are paid to the above organisations to assist their work of fostering a greater public understanding of defence and arms control issues.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has plans to develop a public information programme to highlight issues relevant to the 1990 fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, in the year leading up to the conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: Issues relevant to the review conference are widely discussed in the media and we make our views known as appropriate. We are of course working for a successful outcome to the conference.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why it is not his Department's policy to subsidise the attendance of non-governmental organisations at the 1990 fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The amount of money available to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to assist non-governmental organisations is inevitably limited, and requests for funds exceed the total amount available. We therefore face difficult decisions on allocations every year. It has not been our policy in the past to finance the attendance of non-governmental organisations at NPT review conferences and, in the light of other commitments and our overall policy objectives, we are unable to make new funds available for this purpose in 1990.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are available at the British post in Dusseldorf to interview those applying for visas to visit the United Kingdom; and whether he proposes to increase staffing at the post to reduce current waiting times for interview.

Mr. Eggar: The consulate-general at Dusseldorf normally has four entry clearance officers, of whom three are used to conduct interviews and one to deal with postal applications. In addition, two relief entry clearance officers have recently arrived to assist with the normal increase in applications during the summer months and the expected demand for visas from Turkish nationals resident in the Federal Republic. It is known that the posts are under considerable pressure and the question of deploying further entry clearance staff at Dusseldorf is being kept under review.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Mohammad Asif Gill, whose date of birth is 30 September 1964 and whose serial number is SN 65460, applied to the post in Islamabad to enter the United Kingdom; and when a decision on his application is to be taken.

Mr. Eggar: In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many reports have been published by departmental select committees since 1979; and how many have been debated on a substantive motion.

Mr. Wakeham: Since 1979, 504 reports and 193 special reports have been published by departmentally-related Select Committees. Seven have been debated in the House on substantive motions. Numerous other reports have been debated on other occasions, including debates on motions for the adjournment of the House, and on Estimates days.

ENVIRONMENT

Kirklees (Earnings)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the estimated payment in the area covered by Kirklees council for (a) a man on average male earnings and (b) a woman on average female earnings in 1990-91 under a system of local income tax.

Mr. Gummer: The level of bills under a system of local income tax would depend primarily on the level of expenditure undertaken by Kirklees council and the amount of support available from Government grants and business rates. Such figures for 1990-91 are not known. However, figures were placed in the Library on 23 June 1988 showing the level of income tax needed to fund local authority expenditure in 1988-89. On this basis the figures sought by my hon. Friend are estimated as follows. a man on average male earnings would pay £775 and woman £445.

Housing Act (Right-to-buy Provisions)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for the operation of the right-to-buy provisions of the Housing Act of the purchase by Trent Valley Housing Company from elderly council tenants of their recently purchased council houses.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that Trent Valley Housing is in certain cases willing to finance the exercise of the right to buy by tenants aged 55 or over on condition that the former tenant sells to the company after three years, retaining the right to remain in the home rent-free for life. The company recommends prospective clients to take independent legal advice. Tenants may finance a purchase under the right to buy from whatever source they choose and, once they have bought, may sell their home to whomever they choose, subject to the requirement to repay discount in the event of early disposal.

Housing Stock (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the numbers of local authority housing stock in (a) Corby and (b) East Northamptonshire as at 1 April 1979 and the latest convenient date.

Mr. Trippier: The information for April 1979 and April 1988 was reported by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1) and appears in column B11 of "HIP1 All Items Print (1979)" and column A11 of "HIP1 All Items Print (1988)".

Copies of both documents are in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why it has taken 11 weeks for him to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams of 22 March about the boundary fence around HMS Cambridge at Wembury, South Devon; what further information is he awaiting before he can give a substantive reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I regret that I have not been able to send my hon. Friend a substantive reply to his letter of 22 March 1989. The PSA, which is acting as agent for the erection of the proposed fence, await instructions from the Ministry of Defence. I am told that these will be issued shortly; I will then write to my hon. Friend.

Bristol UDC

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has received any request from the Bristol urban development corporation for powers to take land at St. Anne's road, Brislington, Bristol, which is currently in the ownership of the Bristol city council, into the area of the urban development corporation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to prevent land gifted to Bristol city council to be retained as a children's play area from being vested in the urban development corporation; and if he will make a statement;

(3) on what date the meeting of the Bristol urban development corporation was held at which the decision was made to request that land at St. Anne's road, Brislington be included in the area of the urban development corporation;

(4) what information he has received on the use the Bristol urban development corporation proposes for the land it wishes to have vested from the Bristol city council at St. Anne's road, Brislington; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what procedure has been adopted by the Bristol urban development corporation to obtain land at St. Anne's road, Brislington, from the Bristol city council; if he has approved the procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The land in question is already within the Bristol urban development area as designated by The Bristol Development Corporation (Area and Constitution) Order 1988 dated 10 May 1988 and the amendment order dated 8 December 1988. The corporation decided at its first meeting on 2 February 1989 to ask my right hon. Friend to vest 0·63 Ha of open land at St. Anne's road, Bristol which they anticipate will be needed for a road junction improvement scheme. The timing of any scheme has yet to be determined. My right hon. Friend has decided not to include this site in the vesting orders he will shortly be laying before the House, but to allow an opportunity for further negotiation to see whether the land can be acquired by agreement from Bristol city council.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the Bristol urban development corporation was formally established; when and where the first meeting was held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Bristol development corporation was established on 19 January 1989. The board held its first meeting on 2 February 1989 in Tollgate house, Bristol.

Tenants' Choice Transfer

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he can give to local authorities who have to pay large disposal costs on a tenants' choice transfer.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has today issued a consultation paper to the local authority associations proposing ways in which these disposal costs might be phased in certain particular circumstances. Subject to the responses to that, we will come forward with the necessary amendment to the Local Government and Housing Bill.

EC Environment Council

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the European Community Environmental Council in Luxembourg on 8-9 June.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

I am delighted to report that, after exhaustive negotiations in which the United Kingdom played a leading role, the Council agreed a directive on the second stage of exhaust emission standards for small cars. This now produces clear guidelines for the motor industry to follow in planning its future car production.

The agreement contains strict standards requiring under present technology three-way catalysts to be introduced on 1 July 1992 for new models and on 31 December 1992 for all new registrations. These are tough targets and the challenge they present to industry should not be underestimated. Nevertheless we believe them to be attainable. They are greatly to the advantage of the European environment, but do not control all the emissions from cars that cause concern. Thus, at United Kingdom insistence the Commission has undertaken to come forward with proposals to reduce these, not least of which is carbon dioxide, the most important greenhouse gas. The present agreement does not limit the emission of this gas and if any will tend to increase it.

The unity of the market will be protected by an article in the directive which circumscribes the fiscal incentives that can be introduced by member states and requires all proposed incentives to be notified to the Commission.

As the House knows, the United Kingdom urged an indefinite ban on the import of harp and hooded seal pup skins and their products in 1985, when EC directive 23/129 was extended for four years. Now I am delighted to announce that the Council has unanimously agreed that the directive should be extended indefinitely. This is a significant step towards ensuring the conservation of these species.

The Community will support the case for listing the African elephant on appendix I of the convention on trade in endangered species, but of course recognises the need to listen to the arguments from all sides on the best long-term measures to protect this species. Meanwhile, as a precautionary measure I am also pleased to report that the Council strongly supported the United Kingdom proposal for an immediate ban on the import into the Community of raw and worked ivory. The Commission will now bring forward proposals to impose a ban throughout the Community. Member states were invited to take their own action in advance of these proposals, and we have immediately imposed a ban on imports of ivory into the United Kingdom.

The Council adopted a resolution on the greenhouse effect which recognises the importance of the issue and the importance of the Community and all member states contributing fully to the wider international efforts to improve the understanding of climate change and develop policy responses to it.

I am pleased to report that agreement was reached on a directive requiring the up-grading of existing municipal waste incinerators according to specific timetables. The Council also adopted a directive setting standards for new municipal waste incineration plants, following the agreement which was reached on 2 March.

The Council agreed an amendment to directive 80/779 on air pollution from smoke and sulphur dioxide. The amendment concerns short-term methods of measurement which do not affect the United Kingdom. It also provides for a general review of the directive in which we shall be closely involved.

Agreement was reached on a directive which establishes a regulatory structure for laboratory and industrial processes working with genetically modified micro-organisms within containment. The directive lays down certain procedures for the notification of work and standards to be followed to protect human and environmental safety, which procedures are broadly compatible with existing domestic safety arrangements. The Council voted unanimously to change the legal base from article 100A to article 130S, recognising that the predominant objective of the directive is one of environmental protection.

The Council adopted a directive leading to the elimination of pollution caused by wastes from the titanium dioxide industry and agreed unanimously that the legal base should be article 130S.

A proposal to introduce controls over discharges of four dangerous substances of water was also discussed.

The Commission presented progress reports on a proposal concerning the protection of waters pollution by nitrates and on a proposal concerning the protection of natural and semi-natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Carrick House Hostel

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes have taken place in the process of admission to Carrick House since it became the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; why such changes have taken place; and what have been the effects on the hostel of the changes.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by the chairman that the Executive has decided not to accept new admissions other than former residents who left the hostel within the last 12 months. This is because the Housing Executive in carrying out its responsibilities under the Housing Order (NI) 1988 considers that the hostel which had become, under previous management, a long-stay hostel for homeless men is unsuitable to meet the short-term requirements of the homeless. This policy which has been in operation since 1 April has had little effect on the hostel to date.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs were created in tourism-related development projects in Northern Ireland in the years 1977, 1978, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Short Brothers plc

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in the current year he has answered questions from the right hon. Member for Strangford relating to the future of Short Brothers plc.

Mr. Viggers: Two written questions, including one that I answered yesterday.

Effluent Standards

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those applications made to him in the current year by water authorities for the lowering of effluent standards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The water service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is the sole water authority in Northern Ireland. Another division of the Department—the Environmental Protection division (EPD)—is responsible for setting standards for discharges from water and sewage treatment works. In the current year EPD will be reviewing the discharge standards of 100 sewage treatment works in a continuing programme of review of all significant discharges from sewage works.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what level within health and social services boards responsibility for the grading of medical laboratory scientific officers lies.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The Professional and Technical Staffs joint council agreement, under which the grading of medical laboratory scientific officers is currently being reviewed, does not specify the management level at which the review should be conducted. This is a matter for each health and social services board to decide.

Income Support

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will commission independent research to ascertain the extent to which income support levels are adequate to meet the needs of elderly people in residential and nursing homes in Northern Ireland and to gather information on the practices of using personal expenses allowances to augment income support and other state provision in meeting the costs of staying in such accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1989]. No such research is proposed. As the hon. Member will know, income support levels in Northern Ireland are kept in line with those applying generally in Great Britain. The Government are currently considering the arrangements for assisting people in residential care in the light of the Griffiths report.

Health (Grading Review Teams)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects area health and social services boards to begin work on grading review teams.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1989]: All the health and social services boards are already working on the grading of medical laboratory scientific officers. It is up to each board to decide how it carries out the grading exercise and whether or not it sets up a specific grading review team.

Clinical Regrading

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will instruct area boards to adhere to the job descriptions outlined in paragraphs 3 and 4 of annex B of the national agreement on clinical regrading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The paragraphs referred to by the hon. Member do not outline job descriptions. They refer to the use of job descriptions and set out the factors to be considered when grading a post. This guidance has already been issued to the health and social services boards.

School Buses (Accidents)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what possible measures have been considered to help reduce road traffic accidents involving children disembarking from school buses; whether a cost-benefit analysis was conducted of each possible measure; and what decisions have been made as a result of such appraisals.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The following measures have been considered and implemented to help reduce road traffic accidents involving children disembarking from school buses:

(a) Rule 24 of the current edition of the Northern Ireland Highway Code sets out the safety rules for getting on or off buses.

(b) Rule 53 of the Highway Code warns drivers to look out for children getting on or off buses.

(c) Every year since 1973 the Department of the Environment has provided a free copy of a road safety teaching calendar to every primary school teacher in Northern Ireland. This teaching aid always has at least one road safety lesson about getting on and off school buses safely.

(d) In conjunction with the Education and Library boards the Department's road safety education branch produced a leaflet for parents about safety of children on school buses which has been distributed with bus passes.

(e) In consultation with road safety education branch the transport officers of the Education and Library boards have issued a safety manual to all board drivers, which includes instructions about the safety of children entering and leaving school buses.

Suggestions about Education boards employing bus wardens and about traffic being required to stop in rural areas when the school bus stops and a flashing roof light is operating, have been examined but were considered to be impractical or unlikely to be effective.

No cost benefit analyses have been conducted on any of these measures.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for passports at the Glasgow passport office are currently outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There are about 80,000 applications for passport services at the various states of processing within the Glasgow passport office. Applications are being processed at a rate of around 8,500 a week, according to the applicant's travel requirements, with priority being given to urgent cases. My right hon. Friend announced on 6 June in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) at columns 47-48, a number of measures which are being taken to ease the present problem of delays at the passport offices.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report, for each passport office (a) the number of telephonists manning the switchboard, (b) the number of telephone calls handled per day and (c) the average waiting time for callers before the call is answered.

Mr. Renton: Details of the number of staff engaged on telephone answering duties at the six United Kingdom passport offices during May this year, together with the average number of calls dealt with daily, are shown in the table below.

Passport office	Daily average number of
	Staff on telephone answering duties	Calls dealt with personally	Calls dealt with by recorded message
London	5	465	2,913
Glasgow	5·5	567	1,895
Peterborough	8	817	2,068
Newport	6	311	3,148
Liverpool	[1]10	449	4,172
Belfast	1	166	355

[1] Since the start of industrial action at Liverpool on 30 May it has not been possible to staff all the telephone inquiry points.

Waiting times for responses to telephone calls are not recorded at all passport offices. The available information shows that at Peterborough and Belfast all connected calls were answered in under five minutes, while at London, on average, all but 10 connected calls a day were so answered.

Improved telephone facilities to enable more calls to be handled are due to be installed at Newport later this month and at Liverpool during next month.

Education Schemes

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether local authorities who claim grant for education schemes under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 will be able to continue to do so under local management schemes without having to resubmit their schemes for further approval; and whether there are any plans to alter the mechanism which operates under section 11.

Mr. John Patten: The introduction of local management schemes under the Education Reform Act 1988 will not require local authorities to resubmit posts already approved for grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to the Home Office for reapproval unless the duties of the posts concerned change. The Government are at present considering the report of an efficiency scrutiny of the section 11 grant scheme.

Breath Tests

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the responses to his consultation on possible changes to the breath testing legislation favoured (a) random breath testing or highly visible mass testing at a roadside checkpoint aimed principally at deterring excess alcohol offenders and (b) unfettered police powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 8 May 1989, at column 284.

Chinese Nationals

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to advise Chinese nationals resident in the United Kingdom that activity antagonistic to the Chinese Government within the United Kingdom will not enhance or effect their potential entitlement to refugee status.

Mr. Renton: No. Any applications for asylum will be considered in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 convention and 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees; and all relevant circumstances will be taken into account.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any new appointment has been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Gordon Marsh, who has recently retired from his post as Deputy Health Service Commissioner with the office and the Health Service Commissioner for England, has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the authority. He will take up his post on 3 July. The appointment is being made in order to fill an existing vacancy.

Broadcasting

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he envisages, under his broadcasting proposals, that applicants will be permitted to bid for more than one Channel 3 licence.

Mr. Hurd: Under the ownership proposals which I announced on 19 May in answer to a written question from my hon. Friend at columns 317-19, an individual licensee will be able to own two Channel 3 licences provided they are not both large or contiguous. The definition of large will be given in subordinate legislation. Applicants for Channel 3 licences will be permitted to apply for any number of licences provided they make clear their order of preference. Those who are successful in the bidding for more than the two licences to which they are entitled will be awarded the relevant licence or licences on the basis of their declared preference.

Asylum

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently seeking asylum.

Mr. Renton: Information on the number of persons applying for refugee status and whose applications were awaiting a decision at the end of a year is published annually in Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics United Kingdom". The latest, issue 16/88 relates to 1987, a copy of which is in the Library; that for 1988 will be published within the next month.

May Bank Holidays

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has considered the possibility of moving one of the May bank holidays to September or October.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 16 May at columns 160-61, to my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory).

Night Sanitation (Prisons)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many places in each prison in England and Wales (a) do and (b) do not have access to night sanitation;

(2) how many places in each prison in England and Wales (a) will and (b) will not have access to night sanitation by 1995.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current position is set out in the table. Equivalent figures cannot be given for individual establishments in 1995 because specific building plans are not approved more than two years ahead and may be subject to change. The total number of places without access to night sanitation will, however, be substantially reduced by 1995 on the lines described by my right hon. Friend in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) on 20 February 1989 at column 61.

Cash-point Thefts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cash-point thefts there have been in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979 and for 1989 to date.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hong Kong

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the readiness of the British people to accept a significant level of net migration from Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: Any substantial increase in immigration to this country would of course present major problems. However, the uncertainties facing the people of Hong Kong are well known. In the light of the recent events in China, we are therefore considering what changes are called for in the immigration arrangements as they relate to British dependent territory citizens in Hong Kong. We shall bring forward proposals in due course.

Prisons (Dormitory Accommodation)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners on remand awaiting trial or sentence are confined in dormitory accommodition;

(2) in how many prisons in each security category prisoners are confined in dormitory accommodation; and how many prisoners are so confined in each prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 June 1989]: The available information relates to prisoners held in rooms defined as "any unit of accommodation whether secure or otherwise designed for 2 or more persons excluding accommodation defined as a double cell".

This definition encompasses accommodation conventionally known as dormitories. The available information does not distinguish between classes of occupant but unsentenced prisoners are not normally held in dormitories.

SCOTLAND

Food Poisoning (Untreated Milk)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of food poisoning associated with untreated milk occurred in Scotland in each of the years from 1978 to 1982; and how many have occurred in each year since the ban on commercial sales of untreated milk introduced in August 1983.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of reported cases of food poisoning associated with the consumption of untreated milk for each year since 1978 are as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1978	[1]251
1979	[1]155

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: This depends upon the matter under discussion.

Dornie Bridge

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he anticipates the construction work on the new Dornie bridge, Ross-shire, to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The work on the new Dornie bridge carrying the A87 trunk road to the Skye ferry terminal at Kyle of Lochalsh will start on 10 July 1989 following the award of tender to Harbour and General Works Ltd. on 16 May 1989

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he can now give a date for the expected publication of the White Paper on the future of the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Lang: The White Paper detailing the Government's firm policy proposals on the future of the Scottish new towns will be published shortly.

Fire Civil Defence

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each fire authority (a) the date of first appointment of a brigade emergency planning officer and (b) the expenditure incurred on fire civil defence activities and the amount of grant aid paid towards that expenditure for each year from 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The dates of first appointments of brigade emergency planning staff officers are as shown. Figures for the expenditure incurred by each fire authority on civil defence activities and the amount of grant aid paid towards that expenditure for each year since 1979 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Amounts for 1987-88, the last year for which all audited claims have been received, are as follows:

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman and chief executives of the Scottish new towns; and if he will make a statement on the items discussed at the meeting.

Mr. Lang: I met the chairman and chief executives of the Scottish new town development corporations on Thursday 1 June 1989, when we discussed a range of matters concerning the new towns.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the capital programme for Scottish Homes for the current financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The gross capital programme figure is dependent on Scottish Homes achieving the projected capital receipts figure for this year. Assuming that figure is achieved, the gross capital programme will be £299 million.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the projected capital receipts from the sale of houses for the current financial year for Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The projected net capital receipts figure, which has been agreed with Scottish Homes, is £110 million. This sum is expected to be made up largely from receipts from the sale of Scottish Homes' own stock but also includes receipts expected from the sale of housing association property and a small amount from repayments of grant or bridging finance.

Council House Sales

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and total value of council houses sold by each district council since the start of the current financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the sale of council houses is collected centrally from local authorities on a quarterly basis. Information relating to the current financial year is not yet available.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Forestry Commission's proposals to designate sites as nature reserves; and if he will list the sites proposed for such designation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission has chosen 46 forest nature reserves from the hundreds of conservation sites on its land. They have been managed by the Commission for conservation purposes for many years, and are accessible and open to everyone. They are listed in the Commission's leaflet entitled "Forest Nature Reserves", which is available in the Library.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the practice of blocking of badger sets and digging of fox-earths by fox hunters on Forestry Commission land.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any recent advice from the Nature Conservancy Council on this subject.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each of the Training Agency's areas within Greater London, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Glasgow, Sheffield, Birmingham and Solihull, Coventry and Warwickshire, and for each of the latest four three monthly periods available, how many unemployed people have (a) been called in for a restart interview, (b) attended a restart interview, (c) been referred to unemployment benefit offices for failing to attend their interview, (d) had their benefit or national insurance credits disallowed for failing to attend their interview, (e) been called in for a restart follow up interview, (f) attended a restart follow up interview, (g) been referred to unemployment benefit offices for failing to attend their follow up interview and (h) had their benefit or national insurance credits disallowed for failing to attend their follow-up interview.

Mr. Lee: The information as requested is not available. however, the following table gives the information for the relevant employment service areas.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for Great Britain and each training Agency area, how many individual child care allowances are being received by lone parent ET participants; and how many were granted or refused for each of the latest available three months.

Mr Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 16 May 1989, at columns 177-79, which is the latest information available. Information about lone parents receiving child care allowances before April and those refused the allowance is not available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dockers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many dockers are employed in non-dock labour scheme ports and in dock labour scheme ports currently; how many were employed in 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of dock workers in scheme ports has fallen from 25,770 in 1979 (NDLB annual report) to 9,280 on 30 May 1989 (NDLB figures). There are no comparable figures for the number of dock workers in non-scheme ports in 1979 and currently. The most recent available figures show that in 1987 there were 3,900 dock workers in non-scheme ports, 10 per cent. more than in 1983.

Scheme ports are continuing to lose business and jobs to ports outside the scheme, free from its restrictions. The abolition of the scheme will enable all our ports to compete on equal terms.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to how many acres of land in the ports of London, Glasgow, Liverpool and Hull the dock labour scheme applies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Questions about authorities' landholdings are for them to answer. The Department of Employment does not have this information.

The dock labour scheme has acted as a disincentive to investment and has caused a decline in employment both in the ports in which it operates, and in the surrounding areas. This has affected not only registered dock workers but those people living near the docks who could otherwise have been employed by companies investing in the port area.

Prices and Costs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department monitors movements in the prices and costs of particular goods and services purchased; and how such movements in prices and costs have differed from the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Cope: The Department began to introduce a computerised management information system designed to record all purchases at the beginning of 1988. This database makes possible more detailed comparative analysis of spending patterns, but so far insufficient data has been collected to compare the change in the cost and prices of goods and services purchased by this Department with the gross domestic product deflator.

North-West Tourist Board

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what grants were made to the north-west tourist board from the English tourist board in the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The English tourist board has made the following subventions from its grant in aid provision to the north-west tourist board:

Financial year	Total subvention £
1986-87	198,000
1987-88	214,154
1988-89	227,500

Training Schemes

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have passed through Government employment training schemes in the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: Just over 5 million people started Government employment training schemes funded through the Training Agency (formerly Training Commission, formerly Manpower Services Commission) in the 10 years from April 1979 to March 1989.

Security Guards

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will propose a code of practice for employers of security guards.

Mr. Nicholls: No. However, I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has asked officials to consider with the police and the private security industry ways in which self-regulation of the industry might be improved.

Service Industries

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed in service industries including tourism in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: In December 1988, the latest date for which estimates are available, there were 15,661,000 employees in employment in the service industries including tourism in the United Kingdom.

Tourism-related Projects (Jobs)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs were created in tourism-related development projects in the inner cities of England and Wales in the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs were created in tourism-related development projects in north-west England in the years 1977, 1978, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available. The number of hotel and catering employees in employment in the north west in each of the years requested is shown in the following table.

Employees in employment in Hotels and Catering North West England

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs were created in tourism-related development projects in rural areas of England and Wales in the years 1977, 1978, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Tourist Attractions

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the top 20 tourist attractions in numbers of tourists attending or visiting in England and Wales.

Mr. Nicholls: The following table gives the information:

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the earnings for England from tourism in 1987, 1988, 1977 and 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information relates to expenditure by international and domestic visitors staying at least one night in England. Figures for expenditure by United Kingdom residents on day-trips within England are not available.

English Tourist Board

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government grants were made to the English tourist board in the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: Payments made by my Department to the English tourist board were as follows:

Financial year	Grant-in-Aid	Section 4	Total
1986-87	10,764,000	9,500,413	20,264,413
1987-88	11,435,000	12,000,000	23,435,000
1988-89	12,576,100	13,200,000	25,776,000

Labour Statistics

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people in employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: Between March 1983 and December 1988 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 2,951,000 to 26,513,000, the highest level on record. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed, Her Majesty's Forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of (a) people of working age, (b) men of working age, and (c) women of working age, who are (1) economically active, (2) in employment, (3) in full-time employment and (4) in part-time employment for the latest available year in each of the European Community's member states.

Mr. Nicholls: International sources do not differentiate full-time workers from part-time. The latest information which is readily available relates to 1986 (except where otherwise stated), and is as follows:

Percentage of those aged 15 to 64

	In the labour force			In employment
	People	Men	Women	People	Men	Women
Belgium	63	75	51	56	69	43

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of families now in receipt of family credit living in areas covered by (a) the Corby Department of Social Security office and (b) Wellingborough.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest information relates to the beginning of April 1989. At that time the number of families receiving family credit who, at the time their award was made, were living in the areas covered by the two local Social Security offices was as follows:

	Number
Corby	462
Wellingborough	836

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in each of the past five years for which figures are available (a) how many people have been receiving attendance allowance, (b) how many were awarded the attendance allowance in that year and (c) how many lost the allowance because of death or recovery.

Mr. Scott: Reliable information about the termination of attendance allowance awards is not available. The information which is available is as follows:

Attendance allowance: Estimated number of allowances in payment and number of awards made 1984-88

Year	Estimated number of allowances in payment at 31 March	Number of awards made
1984	470,000	181,770
1985	544,000	184,599
1986	585,000	174,064
1987	641,000	208,693
1988	713,000	207,853

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of reducing the qualifying period for the attendance allowance from six to three months.

Mr. Scott: About £110 million in a full year.

Vocational Rehabilitation

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he is satisfied with the integration of vocational rehabilitation with both the structure and administration of social security; what action he is taking to improve co-ordination; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is satisfied with the integration of vocational rehabilitation with both the structure and administration of social security in Wales; what action he is taking to improve co-ordination; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he is satisfied with the integration of vocational rehabilitation with both the structure and administration of social security in Scotland; what action he is taking to improve co-ordination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: As the right hon. Member is aware, the benefits provided for disabled people by this Department are currently subject to review. As part of this process, we and the Department of Employment will consider the relation between the two Departments' provisions.

I understand that the right hon. Member's question has been prompted by a recent report in The Observer alleging plans to withdraw benefits from disabled people completing employment training (ET). I am glad to have this opportunity to say that these allegations are completely without foundation. The rules which govern disabled people's entitlement both during and after ET will continue as they have been from the beginning of the programme. People entering ET will be paid in training allowance at the rate of their previous benefits with an additional premium of £10 per week and, if they still fulfil the entitlement criteria for those benefits on completion of training, will be able to resume payment thereafter.

Personal Pensions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have taken out a personal pension since July 1988.

Mr. Scott: Just over 3¼ million people.

Child Benefit (Prisoners)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if child benefit is paid to mothers serving prison sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Child benefit can be paid to mothers in custody who have a child living with them in prison. Child benefit is intended to help people responsible for bringing up children. A mother who is looking after her child in prison has a significant responsibility for its welfare.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of ceasing to treat (a) child benefit and (b) one parent benefit as a resource for income support, assuming unemployment levels of (a) 1,000,000, (b) 1,250,000, (c) 1,500,000, (d) 1,750,000 and (e) 2,000,000.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 June 1989]: Using the May 1987 annual statistical enquiry, which is the latest statistical data available, and the level of unemployment (2·86 million) existing at that time, the annual cost of disregarding child benefit and one parent benefit in income support would be £870 million and £160 million respectively at the current rates in payment. It is not possible to estimate the costs for the requested unemployment levels because the number of families entitled to these benefits and their composition do not alter in proportion to the changes in the number of unemployed people.

HEALTH

Self-Governing Status

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussion has taken place regarding the proposal for the Wakefield health authority's mental health unit to have self-governing status; and when;

(2) what he regards as constituting an expression of interest in self-governing status for hospitals and National Health Service units;

(3) what response has been received from (a) Wakefield community health council, (b) Wakefield branch of MIND, (c) Wakefield branch of MENCAP, (d) West Yorkshire branch of the National Schizophrenia Fellowship and (e) Wakefield family practitioner committee to the proposal for Wakefield health authority's mental health unit to have self-governing status.

(4) who has been consulted regarding the proposal for Wakefield health authority's mental health unit to have self-governing status.

Mr. Mellor: Expressions of interest in self-governing status are no more than that. These range from detailed proposals to brief letters registering interest. It would be unrealistic to require consultation at this stage, before people have enough information to make an informed decision. Those with an interest will have an opportunity to express their views at a later stage if those expressing interest decide to proceed with an application.

Hazel Court School, Eastbourne

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the responsibilities of the Eastbourne health authority to provide speech therapy and physiotherapy for the children who need those services at Hazel Court school, Eastbourne, being a school owned by the East Sussex county council.

Mr. Freeman: Eastbourne health authority has a general responsibility to provide speech therapy and physiotherapy services for its resident population. It is for the authority itself to decide what resources within the total available for speech therapy and physiotherapy services to devote to providing services for children at Hazel Court school.

Hospital Building Projects

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report the cost and names of all the hospital building projects costing in excess of £500,000 which are being built or have been completed since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Information held centrally on health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, in England shows that 401 have been completed since 1 January 1979 and that a further 144 are under construction. In view of the length of the lists, I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library. Information is not held centrally on schemes costing less than £1 million.

Nursing Homes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much was spent by district health authorities on inspection of registered nursing homes in each of the last five years;

(2) how much was received in nursing home registration fees by district health authorities in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: The total income from fees recorded in the annual accounts of health authorities in England for the registration and inspection of private nursing homes and private hospitals since 1984-85 was as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	0·24
1985-86	0·52
1986-87	1·39
1987-88	1·97

Fees are set at a level which covers the full costs incurred in providing this service. Figures for earlier years are not available and provisional ones for 1988-89 will not be available until the autumn.

Asthma

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, under the new Health Service proposals, sufferers from a stoma will continue to receive free prescriptions.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

Guy's Evelina Children's Hospital Appeal

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the contribution made by the Guy's Evelina children's hospital appeal to sponsor a cot to supporting cots in that unit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This appeal has been running since 1983 and helps to support additional nurses for the unit's intensive care cots which are always in great demand because of its high reputation. Contrary to recent misleading publicity, Guy's hospital management board has stated that there is no financial crisis in the allocation of National Health Service resources to the unit. The Government fully appreciate, however, the contributions made by individuals and organisations to the support of additional health facilities.

Mental Disorder

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons from which countries of origin, have been refused leave to enter the United Kingdom on the grounds of mental disorder in 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is given in the following table.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that all cystic fibrosis units in hospitals are retained if individual hospitals decide to opt out.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific response he has given to the Association of Cystic Fibrosis Adults regarding the impact of the proposals in his White Paper "Working for Patients" on the care of cystic fibrosis patients.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if a self-governing hospital which provides a specialist service to cystic fibrosis patients will be allowed to discontinue the service solely on the grounds that the service is unprofitable;

(2) if district authorities will be given special dispensation to enable them to refer cystic fibrosis patients to specialist centres for treatment without having regard to cost or contractual arrangements;

(3) what estimate he has made of the future of specialist hospital centres which currently provide a service to cystic fibrosis patients under the new system of acute care proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: A detailed response will be sent to the letter from the Association of Cystic Fibrosis Adults which has only just been received.

Following the implementation of "Working for Patients", cystic fibrosis adults can expect to continue to receive a high quality service. The responsibility for ensuring that a comprehensive range of services is available will remain with the district health authority. The needs of patients requiring unusually expensive medicines or treatments will be taken fully into account when contracts are being placed and when prescribing budgets are being assigned to GP practices.

Every patient will receive the treatment and drugs he or she needs.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the effect on treatment of cystic fibrosis patients on long-term drug therapy of the general practitioner budget arrangements proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Every cystic fibrosis patient will continue to get all the drugs and treatment they require.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to ensure that cystic fibrosis patients will not be refused admission to a general practitioner's list solely because of the potentially high cost of treating the disease under the new general practitioner system of indicative budgets proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The scheme will be structured to take full account of the fact that some patients, such as those with cystic fibrosis, may need potentially high cost treatment. Indicative prescribing budgets will fully reflect these costs and there will be no disincentive to GPs to accept such patients on their lists.

Medical Education and Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the specific ways in which the Government intend to (a) maintain and (b) help to further improve the quality of medical education and research.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Paragraph 4.30 of "Working for Patients" affirmed the Government's commitment to maintaining the quality of education and research and recognised the special needs in this area. The steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education, whose interim report was published on 6 June will consider how the current arrangements can best be improved to ensure that the policies and programmes of the bodies concerned are properly co-ordinated and managed; and make recommendations. The group has already made recommendations, which we have endorsed, on support for the higher service costs associated with teaching.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the institutions and experts which he consulted about the medical education and research aspects of the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: We have received representations from various groups including the Committee on Vice Chancellors and Principals (CVCP), the Joint Medical Advisory Committee (JMAC) and the Joint Committee of Metropolitan and Provincial Deans (JCMPD), which represents the deans of United Kingdom medical schools and clinical facilities. These representations were primarily about education. In addition we have received representations on research from the Medical Research Council (MRC) and the Association of Medical Research Charities and other interested parties. All of these bodies have welcomed the commitment in "Working for Patients" to maintaining the quality of medical education and research.

Nurses (Examinations)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to introduce the UKCC recommended rule change to allow nurses entered on the roll, or the relevant second level part of the UKCC register, as a result of failing their first level exams the maximum permitted number of times, a further three attempts at passing.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Work on the statutory instrument to introduce this change is in hand and the new rule will be in operation in the near future.

NHS Reform

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by family practitioner committee area the numbers of doctors' practices that are eligible to become practice budget holders under the conditions described in "Working for Patients."

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 4 April at column 93. In addition, as working paper No. 3 makes clear, practices may group together in order to opt for practice budgets.

Childhood Cancers

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to encourage work on early detection of childhood cancers and, in particular, the type called neuroblastoma.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The Department provides research funds to the Childhood Cancer Research group, which maintains a national registry of childhood tumours and carries out studies of the causes and treatment of childhood cancers. The Department also supports the cancer screening evaluation unit, which provides advice on existing and possible future schemes of screening for cancer, including neuroblastoma.

Pharmacies

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the reasons for a decision on the location of a pharmacy are (a) made public by the rural dispensing committee and (b) usually made available to interested parties.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Regulations require the rural dispensing committee (RDC) to give written notice of such decisions to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State, the applicant, the family practitioner committees concerned, the local medical and pharmaceutical committees for the areas of those committees and to any other person who has submitted written or oral evidence to the RDC.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to take full account of the urgent resource implications of the fourth report of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, "Disabled Adults: Services, Transport and Employment", in formulating the Government's response to the Griffiths report on community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: We are pleased to have available the wealth of information on the circumstances of disabled people provided by the four reports published to date from the OPCS surveys of disability. We will take careful account of their findings in drawing up our proposals on community care and in our consideration of other policies for disabled people.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that, under the new Health Service proposals, the present range and quality of ostomy appliances will be maintained.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

3. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether more United States or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nuclear-capable forces are proposed to be based in the United Kingdom.

51. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether more United States or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nuclear-capable forces are proposed to be based in the United Kingdom.

72. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether more United States or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nuclear-capable forces are proposed to be based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO allies are still considering a number of options for adjusting remaining nuclear forces following the INF agreement. Amongst these options is the possible deployment to Europe, including the United Kingdom, of additional longer-range dual-capable aircraft from the United States. However, no decision have yet been taken.

24. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been made for additional nuclear weapons to be based in the United Kingdom.

37. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been made for additional nuclear weapons to be based in the United Kingdom.

71. Mr. Waving: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been made for additional nuclear weapons to be based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The proposals for restructuring and modernising NATO's nuclear forces which are under consideration within the Alliance would create scope for further significant overall reductions in NATO's European stockpile of land-based nuclear weapons.

Naval Rules of Engagement

5. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his United States counterpart regarding possible changes to naval rules of engagement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his United States counterpart regarding possible changes to naval rules of engagement.

33. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his United States counterpart regarding possible changes to naval rules of engagement.

Mr. Younger: I have not had any discussions with Mr. Cheney regarding possible changes to naval rules of engagement, although I have had some with his predecessor, Mr. Carlucci and other NATO Allies. The Alliance naturally reviews and updates its rules of engagement from time to time, but it is not our practice to comment on the detail of such matters.

Lance Missile

11. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of Lance missiles deployed by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in West Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 88 Lance missile launchers deployed in Europe by NATO, compared with some 1,500 Warsaw pact nuclear-capable short-range missile launchers. Detailed deployment information is classified.

57. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of Lance missiles deployed by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in West Germany.

59. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of Lance missiles deployed by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in West Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe).

Warsaw Pact (Dissolution)

14. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the prospects for dissolution of the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Younger: There is no evidence that an early dissolution of the Warsaw pact military alliance is likely.

Nuclear Weapons (First Use)

19. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government's policy encompasses the first use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government's policy encompasses the first use of nuclear weapons.

87. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government's policy encompasses the first use of nuclear weapons.

88. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government's policy encompasses the first use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Younger: The possibility of first use of nuclear weapons in response to a conventional attack is central to NATO's strategy of deterrence. However, it would undermine deterrence to spell out in advance the precise circumstances in which nuclear weapons would or might be used.

75. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for NATO's strategy of the adoption of a policy of no-first use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A policy of "no first use" would be fundamentally incompatible with NATO's strategy of flexible response.

NATO (Nuclear Weapons)

21. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his Italian counterpart regarding the modernisation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's short-range nuclear forces.

47. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his Italian counterpart regarding the modernisation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation short-range nuclear forces.

77. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his Italian counterpart regarding the modernisation of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation short-range nuclear forces.

Mr. Younger: I last met the Italian Defence Minister at the meeting of the defence planning committee last week when we discussed a range of defence and security matters affecting the Alliance.

Staff Relocation (Cleveland)

22. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it remains his policy to relocate Ministry of Defence staff to Cleveland; what representations he has received from the unions with regard to the move; and what consideration he gave to the adequacy of road transport links with Cleveland when deciding his policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. It remains our intention to relocate the directorate general of defence quality assurance to Preston farm, Teesside. The trades unions have asked for further information and clarification of a number of points and consultation with them continues. Road transport links with Teesside are recognised as excellent.

Low-flying Aircraft

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints he has received so far this year about low-flying military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: Between 1 January 1989 and 30 april 1989 the Ministry of Defence received 1,912 inquiries and complaints about military low-flying training in the United Kingdom.

Women (Recruitment)

25. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps he is taking to recruit women to the armed services.

Mr. Neubert: We are seeking to widen the opportunities for the employment of women in the armed forces and we expect the number of service women to increase over the next few years. In 1988-89 the number of women recruited into the armed forces rose by 15 per cent. to 3,001. We plan a further increase in the number of female recruits this year.

West German Defence Minister

26. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to meet in the near future the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

53. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to hold talks with his counterpart in the Federal Republic of Germany on mutual defence subjects.

Mr. Younger: I met Dr. Stoltenberg at the meeting of NATO's defence planning committee on 8-9 June, and we also met in London on 26 May for substantive discussions on a wide range of subjects of mutual defence interest. I have no immediate plans for a further bilateral meeting, but I expect to see Dr. Stoltenberg when the independent European programme group meets at ministerial level later this month.

Takeovers (National Interest)

28. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he uses to define the national interest when a United Kingdom defence contractor is the subject of a takeover bid from a non-United Kingdom company.

Mr. Sainsbury: Any factors which could affect the supply to the armed forces of the equipment they need to operate effectively would be taken into account. These factors could be judged only in the context of any specific takeover proposal.

Soviet Union (Force Reductions)

29. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Soviet Union's latest planned cutbacks in its European conventional forces as announced during the recent visit of United States Secretary of State, James Baker.

55. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Soviet Union's latest planned cutbacks in its European conventional forces, as announced during the recent visit of United States Secretary of State, James Baker.

56. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Soviet Union's latest planned cutbacks in its European conventional forces as announced during the recent visit of United States Secretary of State, James Barker.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today, to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie).

39. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the defence implications of the Soviet proposal to thin out front-line forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Reductions in the Warsaw pact's massive conceatrations of forces in Europe would be very welcome. However, their current zonal proposals would make it very difficult to sustain NATO's strategy of forward defence. Nevertheless, we are studying them with care.

BAOR (Nuclear Weapons)

30. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for the British Army of the Rhine of having no nuclear weapons.

43. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the British Army of the Rhine capacity for defence of the removal from its armoury of short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO's strategy of deterrence and defence requires a mix of conventional, theatre nuclear and strategic nuclear forces. Removal of the theatre nuclear component would undermine deterrence and leave our conventional forces very vulnerable to attack.

Soviet Union (Nuclear Weapons)

31. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department will be responding to the Soviet proposal to withdraw 500 nuclear warheads from eastern Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We welcome the Soviet announcement that they will withdraw 500 nuclear warheads from eastern Europe, but believe that this probably represents as little as 5 per cent. of the total number of Soviet nuclear warheads deployed within the European theatre. In contrast, since 1979 NATO has withdrawn 2,400 nuclear weapons from Europe, leaving only approximately 4,600 within the theatre. The Soviet Union will, therefore, have to make further very substantial reductions if they are to come down to the size of NATO's nuclear stockpile in Europe.

Malaysia

32. Miss Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there was any reference in any of the correspondence concerning the sale of arms to Malaysia that preceded the signing of the memorandum of understanding in 1988, to United Kingdom overseas aid to Malaysia.

Mr. Salisbury: Following the expression of Malaysian interest in United Kingdom overseas aid in early exchanges, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made it clear to the Malaysian Finance Minister that it would not be acceptable to Her Majesty's Government to link aid with the defence sales package. As I stated at column 191 on 17 May, the memorandum of understanding makes no mention of overseas aid to Malaysia.

Royal Naval Personnel (Radiation)

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further radiation checks have been carried out on Royal Navy sailors and personnel exposed to nuclear weapons and reactors; and what were the findings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Medical records of all naval personnel are analysed annually, and any health trends are identified. There have been no special surveys to determine whether there is any evidence of medical disorders arising from exposure of Royal Navy nuclear submarine personnel to radiation. However, routine medical surveillance is carried out for those Royal Naval personnel designated as radiation workers in accordance with the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985.

Radiation dose records are kept for Royal Naval radiation workers, and statistics of doses received were published in the replies I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens North (Mr. Evans) on 20 March at columns 477-478 and on 2 May at columns 61-62 this year.

Regular radiation surveys are carried out on board nuclear-powered submarines to ensure that personnel not designated as radiation workers do not receive any significant radiation doses.

Deterrent Strategy (Training)

35. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is given at staff college level on the components of an effective deterrent strategy.

Mr. Neubert: The concept of deterrence pervades all Service officers' staff training. The staff colleges' syllabi require students to be conversant with the current threat, the principles of nuclear and conventional deterrence and the defence strategies and military capabilities of NATO and the United Kingdom. Possible alternative strategies, the effects of arms control and the influence of political will are also studied.

Z-Berths

36. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to revise the system of allocating Z-berths.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Nuclear Deterrent

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent is credible.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today, to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick).

Short-Range Nuclear Weapons

40. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the policy of the West German Government to the modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the recent summit all NATO countries, including West Germany, agreed that for the foreseeable future there would need to be deployed in Europe land, sea and air-based nuclear systems, including ground-launched missiles. They also agreed that to remain effective these systems would have to be kept up to date where necessary.

Short Bros.

41. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications of the privatisation of Short Bros.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD welcomes the return of Short Bros. to the private sector. We look forward to dealing with Shorts under its new owners on the same commercial basis as with our other suppliers of defence equipment.

Trident

42. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about penalty costs associated with the Trident programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Trident programme includes a wide range of contracts. In accordance with MOD policy, all provide where applicable for payment of liquidated damages by the contractor to compensate MOD for the consequences of late delivery of equipment. Equally, provision is made for the prime contractor to recover incurred expenditure and additional costs arising if the MOD cancels a contract. The level of recovery possible will vary, and will depend on a number of factors, including the timing and circumstances of the cancellation.

West Germany

44. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the United Kingdom military contribution to the defence of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British Army of the Rhine and RAF Germany are important parts of the overall United Kingdom contribution to NATO and they have an essential role to play in the defence of the European mainland. Full details of their composition and roles are contained in the 1989 Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm. 675-I).

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his counterpart in the Federal Republic of Germany; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I last met Dr. Stoltenberg at the meeting of NATO's Defence Planning committee in Brussels on 8-9 June. We also met bilaterally in London on 26 May for substantive discussions on a wide range of subjects of mutual defence interest.

Flexible Response

45. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for the strategy of flexible response of a third zero.

48. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for the strategy of flexible response of a third zero.

54. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for the strategy of flexible response of a third zero.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I share the assessment made by NATO Heads of Government at their recent summit that for the foreseeable future there is no alternative to the Alliance strategy of deterrence and that this strategy requires a mix of nuclear forces, including Europe-based ground-launched missiles. I therefore welcome the summit's rejection of a third zero.

78. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the strategy of flexible response in the light of recent proposals on short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I share the assessment made by NATO Heads of Government at their recent summit that for the foreseeable future there is no alternative to the Alliance strategy of deterrence and that this strategy requires a mix of nuclear forces, including Europe-based ground-launched missiles. I therefore welcome the summit's rejection of a third zero.

Eastern Atlantic (Naval Defence)

46. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation naval defence of the eastern Atlantic.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraph 302 of volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cm. 675-I).

Nuclear Weapons and Reactors

49. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide an estimate of the number of nuclear weapons and defence reactors currently on sea and ocean floors.

50. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide an estimate of the number of nuclear weapons and defence reactors currently on sea and ocean floors.

74. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide an estimate of the number of nuclear weapons and defence reactors currently on sea and ocean floors.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We can be confident that there are no nuclear weapons or nuclear reactors on the sea floor within United Kingdom territorial waters. There are no United Kingdom nuclear weapons or reactors on the sea floor anywhere in the world. Nuclear weapons or reactors which belong to other nations and which present no significant threat to the United Kingdom are not the responsibility of the United Kingdom Government.

United States Secretary of State for Defence

52. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the United States Secretary for Defence; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I met the United States Secretary for Defence at the ministerial meeting of the NATO defence planning committee last week when we discussed a wide range of matters of mutual interest.

Expenditure

58. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of defence spending proposed in his defence White Paper; and what will be the cumulative defence expenditure from 1979.

66. Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of defence spending proposed in his defence White Paper; and what will be the cumulative defence expenditure from 1979.

76. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of defence spending proposed in his defence White Paper; and what will be the cumulative defence expenditure from 1979.

86. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of defence spending proposed in his defence White Paper; and what will be the cumulative defence expenditure from 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Defence budget for 1989-90 is £20,143 million. Total expenditure on defence between 1979-80 and 1988-89 has amounted to some £154,000 million.

NATO Secretary General

60. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I last met Dr. Woerner at the meeting of NATO's Defence Planning committee on 8-9 June. We discussed a range of matters of mutual interest.

CND

61. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has recently received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and whether he will make a statement.

69. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has recently received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and whether he will make a statement.

70. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has recently received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since my right hon. Friend last replied to this question on 7 March, at column 737, he has received less than a dozen letters from CND which reflects, no doubt, the continuing decline in support for that organisation.

Equestrian Activities

62. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the cost of support provided by his Department to equestrian activities, excluding those associated with parades.

Mr. Neubert: Public funds are used only to support official equestrian activities. However support costs, such as training, stabling and veterinary services, are an integral part of the expenditure on horses participating in ceremonial and public duties.

Submarines

63. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the ordering programme for both conventional and nuclear submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: This Government have ordered five nuclear powered fleet submarines, of which three have already been accepted into service, and four of the new Upholder class of conventional submarines. We envisage further orders for both nuclear and conventional powered submarines, but no decisions have yet been taken.

Nuclear Tests

64. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with which individuals or organisations he has had discussions in the last year about possible hazards from nuclear tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is impractical to list all individuals with whom my Department has had discussions concerning the British nuclear tests within the last year except at disproportionate cost.

However, I can confirm that a number of organisations have been consulted during the normal course of business. These include the National Radiological Protection board (NRPB), the Imperial Cancer Research fund (ICRF), the Medical Research council (MRC), the International Commission for Radiological Protection (ICRP), the National Health Service central register, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS), the Defence Radiological Protection service (DRPS) together with a number of overseas individuals representing United States and Australian authorities and organisations. We have also received representations from a number of individuals, including right hon. and hon. Members.

Exercise Wintex

65. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the extent of United Kingdom involvement in simulated nuclear war fighting in the recent Wintex staff exercise.

83. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the extent of United Kingdom involvement in simulated nuclear war fighting in the recent Wintex staff exercise.

90. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the extent of United Kingdom involvement in simulated nuclear war fighting in the recent Wintex staff exercise.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exercise Wintex-Cimex is a NATO-wide command post-exercise conducted by Alliance members. Its objective is to test command, control and consultation plans and procedures and to exercise the appropriate crisis management machinery which would be used in the defence of NATO countries in times of international tension and war, including a nuclear phase. Details of the scenario and the precise involvement of individual participants are classified.

Weapon-Free Corridors

67. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of adopting a policy of troop, tank and artillery-free corridors.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We believe that such a policy would be undesirable on both political and military grounds.

Nuclear-Free Zones

68. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will assess the consequences for the security of the United Kingdom of the adoption of nuclear-free zones in Western Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This Government are against the adoption of nuclear free zones in Western Europe, where we believe they would not increase but reduce security and stability. The territory of a zone would still be under threat from weapons outside the zone but targeted on it. Moreover, the mobility of many ground-launched and air-delivered nuclear weapons means that they could be rapidly deployed back into a nuclear-free zone at a time of tension, thus heightening rather than reducing the risk of war.

HMS Southampton

73. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement about the re-fit contract for HMS Southampton.

Mr. Sainsbury: Shortly.

Horseshoe Barracks, Shoeburyness

79. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on his plans to dispose of the Horseshoe barracks in Shoeburyness, Essex.

Mr. Neubert: It remains our intention to dispose of Horseshoe barracks on the open market, once existing facilities have been reprovided elsewhere. We have retained independent consultants to advise on the development potential of the site and we await their definitive recommendations.

Nuclear Test Veterans

80. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest information available to his Department on the terms of the recent judgment in the Australian courts regarding compensation for nuclear test veterans; and what are the implications for his policy on British nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has not yet received a copy of the judgment and until we have had an opportunity to study its content, we will not be able to say what implications, if any, there are for the British nuclear test veterans.

89. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce new compensation arrangements for British ex-servicemen who have suffered radiation ailments arising from their duties.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howell) on 6 June 1989, at column 121.

Ceremonial Duties

81. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many regular service men in (a) Greater London and (b) Windsor are required on an average day to carry out ceremonial duties as sentries; and how many such sentries are posted in each location.

Mr. Neubert: The number of regular service men required on an average day to carry out ceremonial duties as sentries in London and Windsor depends on whether or not Her Majesty the Queen is in residence. Three service men are required to man each post on a 24 hour basis. The numbers at each location are:

	Her Majesty the Queen in residence	Her Majesty the Queen out of residence
Buckingham Palace	15 service men to man 5 posts	9 service men to man 3 posts
St. James's Palace	15 service men to man 5 posts	9 service men to man 3 posts
Tower of London	6 service men to man 2 posts
Windsor Castle	21 service men to man 7 posts	15 service men to man 5 posts

Ceremonial sentry duties are mainly undertaken by the Army, but the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force also provide personnel.

F111

82. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on future deployment plans for the F111 in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett).

Soviet Union (Fighting Vehicles)

84. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has as to whether the Soviets are dismantling their most modern armoured fighting vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is as yet no evidence that the Soviets are dismantling their most modern armoured fighting vehicles.

Anti-satellite Weapons

85. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to meet his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts to discuss the deployment of anti-satellite weapons.

Mr. Younger: I have no plans to do so.

European Fighter Aircraft (Radar)

91. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce an order for the development of a radar for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add at present to the answer that I gave on 9 May 1989 at column 426 to the hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack).

Type 42 Destroyer

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many miles on average type 42 destroyers have travelled over the past 10 years; how many they were designed to travel and over what period; and what steps he is taking to ensure that they are capable of operating for their full service lives.

Mr. Sainsbury: Type 42 destroyers have travelled approximately 31,000 nautical miles per ship per year over the last 10 years. Mileage is not used as a design and operating criterion; ship life is measured in years and experience has shown this to be a good criterion, which takes account of the variety of factors which affect life such as sea states, operational conditions and ship speed. A refitting and maintenance cycle is in operation which ensures that the ships will be fully capable throughout their service life.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the replacement for the type 42 destroyer will be given the same length of trials periods as the type 22 frigates.

Mr. Sainsbury: The acceptance trials of the vessel to replace the type 42 destroyer are expected to take a similar amount of time to those for earlier classes of ships of a similar technical complexity.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to replace the type 42 destroyers when they begin to leave service in 1998.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government are continuing to participate in the NFR 90 project, which could eventually meet the Royal Navy's requirement for an anti-air warfare escort to replace the type 42 destroyers.

Aegis Air Defence System

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he envisages future procurement of the American Aegis air defence system.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

HMS Bristol

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to replace HMS Bristol with an air defence ship of similar capabilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet been taken on how long HMS Bristol, which was commissioned in 1973, will remain in service. There are no plans to replace her with another type 82 destroyer.

Sea Dart

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the efficiency of the Sea Dart missile system.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Sea Dart missile system meets or surpasses the performance and reliability criteria specified in the naval staff requirement (NSR 6502).

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Royal Navy will be entirely reliant upon the Sea Wolf system for air defence when the Sea Dart system is withdrawn from service; and how area defence will be provided.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Sea Dart system is expected to remain in service into the next century.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the likelihood of the Sea Dart system becoming obsolete before the end of the service lives of the type 42 destroyers that carry it.

Mr. Sainsbury: As a result of assessments already undertaken, action is in hand to ensure the Sea Dart system continues to be effective and supportable until the ships in which it is fitted are phased out of service.

Sea King

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to replace the Sea King AEW with a purpose-built aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no plans to do so at present. The Sea King, equipped with Searchwater radar, will continue to provide airborne early warning for the Royal Navy into the next century.

Air Search Surveillance

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on which NATO services operate three dimensional air search surveillance radars for their ships; and when the Royal Navy will obtain such a capacity.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our policy to comment in detail on the operational capabilities of NATO allies. Her Majesty's ships are equipped with a number of air defence radars which provide the capabilities judged to be necessary to satisfy the Royal Navy's operational requirements. Details of the equipments deployed are classified.

Fleet Missile Systems

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what missile system is planned to defend the fleet from aerial attack at medium and long ranges in the 1990s and into the next century.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom is currently engaged in two parallel projects aimed at meeting this requirement, the NATO anti-air warfare system (NAAWS) and the European family of anti-air missile systems (FAMS). We are pleased with the progress of both these projects, but are not yet in a position to indicate a preference between the two.

Type 21 Frigate

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to replace the six type 21 frigates which will be at least 20 years old by 1997.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have plans for sufficient orders of new type 23 frigates to ensure that the strength of the destroyer and frigate force remains at about 50 as older ships are progressively paid off in the next decade. No decisions have yet been taken on when the type 21 frigates will be paid off.

Clothing and Vehicles

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government are planning to rely on external sources of supply to equip the armed services with clothing and vehicles in the event of a conventional war.

Mr. Neubert: No. Availability of clothing and vehicles from internal sources of supply is generally deemed sufficient to meet the needs of the armed services in the event of a conventional war.

Personal Injury Claims

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims for compensation because of personal injury due to alleged negligence have been made by members of the forces in each year since they were entitled to do so; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 139 claims were received in 1987, a further 265 in 1988 and another 204 have been received so far this year. Of these claims, 60 have been successfully concluded and 425 have yet to be finalised. These figures include claims arising from incidents occurring during the six months immediately prior to the repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, which are being dealt with exceptionally on an ex-gratia basis.

Section 10 Certificates

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many section 10 certificates have been issued since 1947 in respect of service men/women who were not nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Neubert: The information could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Insurance

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the insurance policy which the services are required to have for their vehicles by the Road Traffic Acts and whether it covers tracked armoured cars.

Mr. Neubert: The legislation relating to insurance in respect of third-party risks does not apply to vehicles or persons acting in the service of the Crown. Nevertheless, my Department does hold an insurance policy with Guardian Royal Exchange for third-party claims arising out of road traffic accidents involving all its vehicles, including tracked armoured vehicles.

Contractors (Payments)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid to each of the following contractors by his Department in respect of headquarter contracts in the year ended 31 March 1988 (a) Jaguar plc, (b) Dunlop Ltd. aviation division, (c) Rolls-Royce plc supply group and (d) Rolls-Royce plc industrial and marine division.

Mr. Sainsbury: Records of payments made to divisions or other sub-groups within companies are not generally kept. Such information is in any event regarded as commercially confidential. We have no record of any payments made to Jaguar plc.

Woolwich Arsenal West Site

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total area of the Woolwich arsenal west site which is to be released by his Department; and what is its estimated current market value.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 11 April 1989 at column 516. The total area of the Woolwich arsenal west site to be released following the move of the director general of defence quality assurance, a proposal at present the subject of consultation with the trade unions, is approximately 79 acres.

As the site will be sold on the open market by competitive tender, it would not be appropriate to disclose our estimate of current market value.

RAVC, Melton Mowbray

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is now able to announce his decision on the future of the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. As my hon. Friend, the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces told my hon. Friend on 9 May 1989 at column 427, consideration of the review into future arrangements for service animal training will be completed this month. We will then be in a position to make a decision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fraud

68. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps have now been taken to prevent fraud in intervention stocks and export refunds following the latest Court of Auditors report.

Mr. MacGregor: As my hon. Friend knows, I have been taking the initiative in the Council of Ministers on many occasions to press for further action to deal with fraud in the common agricultural policy. I am glad to say that the Commission has undertaken to present to Council later this month a report on follow-up action to the recent Court of Auditors report. This will include a proposal to require member states to carry out an annual check on intervention stocks, to ensure that actual quantities present tally with storekeepers' accounts, and a revised proposal on monitoring export refunds, which would require member states to carry out a minimum level of controls. I will again be pressing Council to take speedy action on these proposals. The Commission has also this month introduced a simplification of the system for beef export refunds designed to reduce opportunities for fraud.

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is yet in a position to make a statement on the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Ryder: I am still considering this.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to oppose any European Economic Community proposals to impose headage limitations on its contributions to hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The European Commission has recently made proposals for amendments to the EC legislation governing hill livestock compensatory allowances, as part of a package relating to reform of the structural funds. The proposals are currently being studied. I can assure my hon. Friend that we shall be seeking to preserve the United Kingdom interests in the forthcoming negotiations. In particular, I remain firmly opposed to the principle of ceilings based on farm size and other measures which would discriminate against the United Kingdom.

Confusion Marks

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what have been for each of the last five years, the administration costs of maintaining a register of confusion marks for the purposes of the sheep variable premium scheme; and how many animals were so registered in each of these years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 13 June 1989]: The cost of administering the confusion mark procedures are not separately recorded. Nor are the number of animals registered under the system noted centrally. Those figures could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many meetings he has had so far in the current year with representatives of the fishing industry in the United Kingdom; and what has been discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 12 June 1989]: I am regularly in touch with the fishing industry. This year I met industry representatives when I visited Hastings and Newhaven on 1 February, the Fish Council in Brussels on 23 February, Billingsgate on 21 March, the Fishing '89 exhibition in Glasgow on 14 April and at the National Federation of Fisheries Organisations' annual general meeting on 10 June. I have discussed a wide range of issues, of both local and national interest, including total allowable catches, vessel licensing, enforcement, management of the Channel cod fishery, quota hopping, beam trawl restrictions, decommissioning, SFIA grants, structure of the fleet and light dues.

TRANSPORT

Bridge Design (East London River Crossing)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South, on 23 March, Official Report, columns 708-9, on the studies of bridge design for the proposed east London river crossing, he will state the date when the consultant's report was, or is expected to be received; and if he will make a statement covering its conclusion.

Mr. Channon: I have nothing to add to my reply of 23 March to the hon. Member.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire, on 12 May, Official Report, column 548, he can indicate when he will announce his decision following the public inquiry held in May 1988 on his Department's proposals for the Birmingham northern relief road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend announced on 22 May his intention to arrange a competition relating to the design, financing and construction of a new highway which would serve broadly the same purpose as the proposed Birmingham northern relief road. A decision on the Department's proposals for BNRR will be made when the outcome of the competition is known.

Davenham Bypass

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on the Davenham bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a Cheshire county council proposal. I understand that it hopes to start work in 1992.

M66/A664 Interchange

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about his new draft order for the M66 line order at the M66/A664 interchange; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to publish a connecting roads order for the M66/A664 junction next year. A period will be allowed for objection and comment.

Semtex (Testing Kits)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has on the availability of explosive testing kits capable of detecting Semtex; and what steps he has taken to acquire these kits for United Kingdom airports or to recommend them to their operators.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has a programme for testing—and, where appropriate, assisting with the development of—equipment designed to detect explosives hidden in items carried on aircraft. Several techniques and individual items of equipment have shown promising results in the laboratory, but we have not yet found any system which will perform satisfactorily under operational conditions at airports.

M11 and M25

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate his estimates of repairs and maintenance for each of the M11 and M25 for each of the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The need for repairs and maintenance of motorways is reviewed each year in the light of condition surveys. Major maintenance work for the M11 and M25 has been planned for 1989-90, as follows:

Location	Works	Cost £ million
M11
Junctions 12-14	Overlay	1·0
South of Junction 5 (Northbound)	Overlay	2·6
South of Junction 5 (Southbound)	Overlay	2·9
North of Junction 5 (Northbound)	Overlay	1·3
North of Junction 5 (Southbound)	Overlay	1·2
Total cost		9·0
M25
Junction 24	Reconstruction	2·9
Junctions 11-13	Reconstruction	0·9

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his route signing in London proposals for change will fully allow for a London-made heavy lorry ban to be enforced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The review of signing in London relates to directional signs on the primary route network. Drivers need simple and logical direction signing if they are to reach unfamiliar destinations safely and quickly. It would not be appropriate to include detailed information on lorry restrictions on such signs.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if full compensation will be paid to local authorities for strengthening of bridges and roads in their areas should 40-tonne lorries be allowed on British roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for highway authorities to maintain to the appropriate standards the bridges for which they are responsible. The provision of resources for this is considered in the annual public expenditure round. We shall shortly be discussing with local authority associations the implications of the recent decision that the United Kingdom's derogation from the EC lorry weights will end on 31 December 1998.

Tow-away Zones (London)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been made by his Department into the introduction of tow-away zones in selected areas in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Metropolitan police have powers throughout London to remove any illegally parked vehicle. It is for them to decide how these powers are exercised. The Department has commissioned studies of the effects of vehicle removal in parts of central London as one method of parking enforcement. The studies are not yet complete.

Level Crossings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths and injuries there have been at level crossings, by type of crossing in Great Britain in each of the last five years; whether there are any limits on the speed of trains at each such type of level crossing; and how many of the incidents in each year resulting in death and injury involved collision with road vehicles.

Mr. Portillo: Table A shows the number of deaths and injuries from accidents at level crossings, by type of crossing, in Great Britain during the period 1984-88. Table B shows the number of incidents involving death and/or injury during those years which resulted from collision between rail and road vehicles. The Department's published requirements for level crossings prescribe limits for train speeds at open, automatic open and automatic half-barrier crossings. The criteria for automatic open crossings have been revised following a review of safety at these crossings by Professor P. F. Stott after the accident at Lockington level crossing on 26 July 1986.

Table A: Deaths and injuries in level crossing accidents

Crossing type	1984		1985		1986		1987		[1]1988

Roads (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the proposed route of the new motorway from the M25 to Chelmsford as announced in the White paper "Roads for Prosperity."

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first step is for the Department to appoint design agents to investigate possible schemes. Only then shall we have an indication of practicable routes.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what timetable he envisages for the building of the new motorway from the M25 to Chelmsford as announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity";

(2) what timetable he envisages for the widening of the Chelmsford A12 by-pass following publication of the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity."

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall seek to complete work on these schemes as quickly as possible. Details about timetable will be contained in a roads report to be issued later in the year.

WALES

Iwan Edgar (Letters)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Transport Policy Division of the Welsh Office received letters from county councillor Iwan Edgar, of Pwllheli, dated 21 November 1988, 2 February 1989, and 10 April 1989, and on what dates each of these letters was answered.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I regret that due to an error a reply to the first letter was not sent. The subsequent letters were repeats of the first letter. A reply has now been sent.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of which of the standards set in the European Community drinking water directive are regularly exceeded by each of the water supplies in Wales which have been granted derogations.

Mr. Grist: The information is as follows.

The Welsh water authority has been granted derogations under the terms of article 9 of the EC drinking water directive (80/778/EEC) as listed in the following table. Information regarding the monitoring of those supplies is not held by the Department.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Purity

66. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last discussed with a member of the European Commission the question of British compliance with European Community directives on water purity.

Mr. Howard: Last month my noble Friend, the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside satisfactorily concluded discussions with the Commission on the enforcement provisions in the Water Bill. A copy of a letter from Commissioner Ripa confirming this was placed in the Library.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has responded to the reasoned opinion of 14 April about the failure of the United Kingdom to transpose and its failure to apply correctly Council directive 80/778/EC on the quality of drinking water.

Mr. Howard: A response will be made to the Commission this week.

Planning Appeals (Windsor and Maidenhead)

Mr. Andrew McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning appeals in the Royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead he has approved in each of the last five years.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is in the table.

Year	Appeals decided	Appeals allowed	Percentage allowed
1984-85	90	28	31·1
1985-86	85	44	51·8
1986-87	109	54	49·5
1987-88	149	80	53·7

Wargrave Sewage Works

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to take into account the results of the investment being made before considering a relaxation of consent levels at the Wargrave sewage works;

(2) what the discharge levels will be from the Wargrave sewage works when the current round of investment is completed in November;

(3) what were the consent levels for discharges from the Wargrave sewage works in (a) 1980 and (b) 1983.

Mr. Howard: The consent levels for the works for 1980 and from 1983 up to the present time are set out in milligrammes per litre.

	Suspended Solids	Biochemical Oxygen Demand	Ammonical Nitrogen
1980	30	15	5
1983 to date	45	18	15

The authority has recently undertaken some remedial work at Wargrave and is proposing to undertake further improvements as part of its major programme for upgrading sewage treatment works. In connection with this, the authority has submitted an application for a time-limited consent in accordance with the arrangements set out in my announcement on 7 December 1988 at column 199—to cover the period up to completion of the works. This is being considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution who will take into account all relevant factors, including the effects of previous investment together with any representations which are received, before reaching a decision.

Cemetery Clauses Act 1847

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the Cemetery Clauses Act 1847 to require local authorities to give details of the number of burial spaces available in each grave sold by the authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None, as the Cemetery Clauses Act 1847 no longer applies to local authority cemeteries. A complete code of administration for local authority cemeteries is now provided by the Local Authorities Cemeteries Order 1977 (SI 1977 No. 204) as amended.

Sewage Treatment Works

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Copeland of 11 May, Official Report, column 520, if he will place in the Library an analysis of those sewage treatment works in respect of which applications have been made for revised sewage discharge consents, showing for each works (a) its eight-figure national grid reference, (b) the parliamentary constituency in which it is situated, and (c) the local authority area in which it is situated.

Mr. Ridley: The question can be answered only at disproportionate cost. The grid reference for each sewage treatment works is included on the application form submitted to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. These forms are available for public inspection at each water authority. The applications themselves, including grid references, have been advertised locally in the press. The other information would have to be specifically compiled and is not relevant to the consideration of the application.

Bristol Channel (Discharges)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 6 June, if he will collate the list of consented discharges into the Bristol channel held by Wessex Water, Welsh Water and South West Water; and if he will publish these.

Mr. Howard: Information on discharge consents is not held by the Department in a form which would allow the identification of discharges in any particular area. Details of consents granted are, however, on the public registers maintained by the water authorities.

New Towns (Land Disposal)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for the new town development corporations to make details of their land disposals available to hon. Members by placing them in the Library on a six-monthly basis.

Mr. Trippier: New town development corporations and the Commission for the New Towns published annual reports which contain summary information about their progress in disposing of assets. These reports are laid before the House under the New Towns Act 1981. Discussion of details of land transactions can often involve considerations of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will introduce procedures to monitor the disposals of land by the new town development corporations.

Mr. Trippier: The Department already monitors new town development corporation land disposals.

Housing (Harassment)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of housing harassment have been reported in each of the London boroughs in each of the last three years.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not collected centrally.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of how long the tenants on the Angell Town estate will need to consider the consultants' reports on housing action trust areas; what steps he will be taking to ensure that tenants have access to the reports; and what resources will be made available to the tenants for these purposes.

Mr. Trippier: As my right hon. Friend announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 16 March, all residents in the proposed trust area in Lambeth have been sent copies of leaflets explaining the consultants' ideas and translations have been made available on request. We have also sent copies of the consultants' reports to tenants' associations, local libraries and advice centres, Lambeth council and to individuals on request. We hope that tenants will play a full part in discussions led by independent consultants about the proposals in the reports and that they will put forward their own ideas. How long these consultations take will depend on how the discussions develop.

Vacant Properties

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of properties owned by his Department in Manchester, Westminster, Suffolk Coastal and the Isles of Scilly are vacant.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 June 1989]: As at 31 May 1989, the total number of all properties (that is, residential, office, storage and specialised) owned by the Department of the Environment in each of the four areas was:

	Total number	Number vacant	Percentage vacant
Manchester	42	1	2·4
Westminster	191	4	2·1
Suffolk Coastal	25	2	8·0
Isle of Scilly	9	1	11·0

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of properties owned by local authorities in Manchester, Westminster, Suffolk Coastal and the Isles of Scilly are vacant.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Based on the information provided by the authorities in their last housing investment programme returns for April 1988, the number of dwellings owned by each of the four authorities was:

	Total number	Number vacant	Percentage vacant
Manchester	98,665	5,166	5·2
Westminster	22,175	893	4·0
Suffolk Coastal	5,678	82	1·4
Isles of Scilly	141	1	0·7

Returnable Bottles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to encourage the use of standard specification returnable bottles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no such plans. We know of no evidence that the introduction of legislation or regulation of this nature would have significant benefit to the consumer, to trade and commerce or to the environment. However, the European Commission, in its draft amendment to the EC beverage containers directive (EC/85/339), has proposed that packagers should be required to label their beverage containers with common recyclable or refillable symbols. Discussions are continuing but, if implemented, this amendment would encourage consumers to return a greater number of bottles for refilling or recycling than happens at present.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners in Care

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the personal allowance element of the pensions paid to residents (a) in local authority care or in long-term hospital beds and (b) in the private or voluntary sector is assessed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The personal allowance for hospital in-patients has been increased over the years in line with the increases in benefit rates and is now £8·70, expressed in the relevant regulations as equivalent to 20 per cent. of the basic retirement pension rate. The allowance for those in local authority accommodation is fixed at the same rate as that for hospital in-patients. In respect of residents of independent residential care and nursing homes the addition for personal expenses is £10·05. This is uprated to reflect changes in prices in the same way as other income support applicable amounts.

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Journalists are invited to briefings on the basis of the subject to be discussed.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for his Department's local offices in Doncaster and Mexborough, what statistical information he has as to the different reasons given to applicants by social fund officers for nil awards in respect of application for community care grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is given in my reply to the hon. Member on 26 April 1989 at column 543-45.

Limited Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of limited appointments for each year since 1979 for each office of his Department in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table gives the number of limited period staff appointments in social security offices in South Yorkshire from May 1987 to March 1989. This is the only period during which such appointments have been made.

Staff Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training is given to the staff in South Yorkshire following the introduction of new legislation by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When new legislation is introduced full consideration is given in advance to the training requirements of all local office staff. Where the change is considered minimal or straightforward, instructions are sent to staff as circulars or amendments to the working manuals. Where the change is more complex or fundamental, additional training and advice material is also provided. This can take a variety of forms ranging from training at a national training centre to local training at the workplace using centrally prepared training material.

Visiting Officers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of visiting officers employed in each office of his Department in South Yorkshire from 1979 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not collect centrally information on the number of visiting officers employed on visiting work in individual offices. Staffing resources allocated for visiting in the Department's north-eastern region are estimated from available data for the following years.

	Number
1983-84	388
1984-85	517
1985-86	444
1986-87	395
1987-88	345
1988-89	244
1989-90	125

The figures do not include specialist visiting or visiting from contributory benefits.

Staff Turnover

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the turnover of staff in each year since 1979 for each office of his Department in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table lists the turnover of staff in social security offices in South Yorkshire. Turnover includes resignations, retirements, dismissals, deaths and transfers to other offices. It also includes promotions within an office. The information is expressed as a percentage of the staffing complement as at 1 April in each year. Figures are not available for periods prior to April 1984.

Therese Devine

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the result of the appeal by Therese Devine, of Hargrave Green, Bury St. Edmunds, against his decision in 1986 that she was not entitled to supplementary benefit; and what steps he has taken to make the appropriate payments to her in the light of the tribunal's judgment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The local social security office have no record of an appeal being received from Therese Devine in 1986 nor was a decision issued at that time refusing her supplementary benefit. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to his letter of 1 March and the subsequent reply from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, dated 12 April in which these matters are fully explained.

Ilford Park Polish Home

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the future of Ilford Park Polish home.

Mr. Scott: Ilford Park Polish home, located near Newton Abbot, Devon, is the last remaining resettlement camp operated by the Department under the Polish Resettlement Act 1947. Polish people who satisfy the criteria laid down in the Act can be considered for admission. The current residents occupy accommodation which mostly predates the opening of the original camp in 1948. The buildings are situated in the central part of a 42-acre site owned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

In view of the declining resident population and the age of the accommodation the Department has for some time now been considering the future of the home. The average age of the residents is increasing and some of them are becoming frail. The present home has more the characteristics of a residential care home for elderly people rather than its original function as a resettlement camp. The present accommodation, age apart, is unsuitable and does not meet the standards required today for residential care homes.

We have therefore concluded that Ilford Park Polish home should be rebuilt at its present site. The aim is to provide accommodation and facilities that meet the standards required of registered residential care homes and nursing homes. On provisional plans the work will be complete by 1992. There will be full consultation with residents and staff, as the details of the scheme are worked out.

HEALTH

Illegitimate Children

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report each parliamentary constituency, together with the proportion, in which the proportion of children born outside marriage in the latest year for which figures are available exceeds 20 per cent.

Mr. Freeman: This statistic is routinely available for local authority districts and for health districts and is published in the annual volume "Key Population and Vital Statistics" for local and health authority areas, which is in the Library. I regret that the statistic is not normally tabulated by parliamentary constituency and so could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Genito-urinary Clinics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases were seen at genito-urinary medicine clinics in England in each year from 1980 to the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table.

New cases seen at NHS genito-urinary medicine clinics, England, 1980 to 1987-88

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what indication he has on those district health authorities which are setting as a local priority the provision of a genito-urinary clinic.

Mr. Freeman: In a letter sent to health authorities in February the Department advised them that, as part of the reports required under the AIDS (Control) Act 1987, details should be given of all completed and planned developments in genito-urinary medicine services. District health authorities are due to publish their reports by the end of June.

Health Service Management Board

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the members of the Health Service management board his or her experience (a) in Health Service affairs and (b) in the supply of personal services to members of the public for which there is no fee or charge.

Mr. Mellor: The members of the NHS policy board were chosen for their capacity to give high calibre independent advice about the strategic direction of the NHS. A significant proportion have had distinguished careers in the Health Service. Others bring a variety of experience from the business world, and an outstanding record of achievement in giving direction to very large organisations.

Family Practitioner Committees (Chairmen)

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list showing for each family practitioner committee whose chairman was not reappointed in March-April 1989, the name of the chairmen not reappointed, their length of service on that family practitioner committee, their status on that committee, namely, as a contractor or lay person, and the name of the person appointed in their place, together with a note of their length of service on that family practitioner committee and their status and, where no reappointment has yet occurred, the date on which he hopes to announce the name of the new chairman and the cause of the hiatus.

Mr. Mellor: The information is contained in the table. We hope to announce names for the two remaining vacancies shortly.

Drugs Testing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the use of patients in the United Kingdom for experimental test purposes for an American drug company provided that the company holds a valid clinical test certificate or clinical trial exemption certificate issued by the United Kingdom licensing authority; what arrangements there are for the patients to be informed that they are to be used for experimental test purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Within the National Health Service all research proposals on human subjects, including drug trials, should be approved by a local research ethics committee before they commence. The committee will want to look at all aspects of the research proposal, including any certificates issued by the United Kingdom Licensing Authority and what arrangements have been made for the information of patients involved, before giving or withholding their approval.

Medical Scientists

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of pay for medical physicists in the National Health Service; and if he has any plans to change the level of retention and recruitment of staff.

Mr. Mellor: The pay of medical physicists is a matter for negotiation between the management side of the scientific and professional staffs council and the staff side representing scientists employed in the NHS. Negotiations are continuing on the staff side pay claim for 1989/90. I understand that the management side has set up a working party which has been investigating the position with regard to recruitment and retention of scientists.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making in negotiations to resolve the Whitley council PTAA staff pay claim for 1989, covering health care professionals, including clinical psychologists, biochemists, microbiologists and other scientists, including those at the public health laboratory service, Porton Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The pay of clinical psychologists, biochemists, microbiologists and other scientists, including those employed at Porton Down, is a matter for negotiation between the management side of the scientific and professional staffs council and the staff side representing scientists employed in the NHS. Negotiations are continuing on the staff side pay claim for 1989-90.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the current remit of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Mellor: The remit of the Health Education Authority is set out in its establishment and constitution order. The authority's main tasks are to advise my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on health education matters and to undertake programmes of health education in England, except for AIDS public education, which is on a United Kingdom-wide basis.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance has been given by his Department to the Health Education Authority on strategic and operational planning for health education programmes for elderly people;

(2) what particular responsibility the Health Education Authority has for the promotion and support of health education programmes for elderly people.

Mr. Mellor: The Health Education Authority has no responsibility to provide health education for any specific age group. The planning guidelines issued by the Department of Health to the Health Education Authority ask that the Health education needs of elderly people be taken into account in the authority's forward plans which are currently being developed.

Hospitals

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report those hospitals which opened in each district health authority in 1988, together with the number of beds.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Abortion

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report those recommendations contained in the Select Committee on the Abortion (Amendment) Bill 1974-75 which have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The then Secretary of State announced acceptance in principle of the nine recommendations made by the Select Committee and all of them were subsequently implemented in part or in full.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report those recommendations contained in the First and Second Reports of the Select Committee on Abortion 1976 which have not been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The first report of the Select Committee recommended that the Government should introduce legislation to amend the Abortion Act 1967 in a number of ways. This would, however, have involved departure from the longstanding practice of leaving legislation on abortion to Bills brought forward by private Members as successive Governments have been neutral on abortion legislation. The second report concentrated on research, conscientious objection, disparity in the provision of NHS services, and the cost of abortion in the NHS, and made four recommendations which were not taken forward in the terms in which they were expressed.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of abortions performed on girls aged 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 years according to the grounds of termination in each year since 1968;

(2) what was the total number of abortions performed on girls aged 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 years since 1968.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that the information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of abortions performed on girls aged 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 years according to the grounds of termination in 1987 and 1988 for 18 weeks and each week thereafter to 28 weeks.

Mr. Freeman: The exact information requested cannot be released for reasons of maintaining confidentiality. The table shows the data which can be released within these constraints for 1987; data for 1988 are not yet available.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of abortions at 21 weeks, 23 weeks and 24 weeks gestation were performed during 1987 and 1988 on girls aged 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 years to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Freeman: There were three abortions performed in England and Wales in 1987 with mention of ground 5 of the 1967 Abortion Act (which allows abortions to be performed in order to save the life of the pregnant woman). Further details relating to age or gestation cannot be given for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

Data for 1988 are not yet available.

Cancer Screening

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how far the recently agreed programme of breast screening for women aged over 50 years has been implemented; and whether he has any plans to widen the service.

Mr. Mellor: The table lists those breast screening centres in England which are now operational.

Under the programme, all women aged between 50 and 64 years will be invited to be screened by mammography every three years; older women will be screened on request. The purpose of screening is to detect changes in breast tissue which might be cancerous at an early stage when treatment can be simple and most likely to be effective.

Plans for extending the breast screening programme to cover all district health authorities in England are well advanced; a full nationwide service comprising about 80 centres (including mobile units) is expected to be operational in 1990.

The breast screening programmes in the other parts of the United Kingdom are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland and of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Midwives

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he now expects to respond to the Social Services Committee regarding midwives' regrading; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) and my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 10 May 1989, at columns 450-51.

NHS Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many of the units expressing interest in self-governing status have complied with paragraph 5.3 of the self-governing hospitals working paper No. 1; and if he will take steps to require the remainder to do so;

(2) if he will list those units contained in his list of medical units expressing interest in becoming self-governing who have consulted staff and patient representatives and have met with their approval;

(3) when considering applications for self-governing status from ambulance services, whether he intends consulting other emergency services; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether he intends to consult medical staff and patient representatives when making a decision to approve or disapprove applications for self-governing status in light of his commitment to judge whether the changes would be in the interests of the National Health Service, hospitals and patients.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Expressions of interest are no more than that. We are aware that in many cases informal consultation has taken place but it would be unrealistic to engage in formal consultation at this stage, because people may not have enough information to give an informed opinion. All the main interests—including staff and the local community—will have an opportunity to express their views when detailed proposals have been worked up. We will take all responses into account when deciding whether to approve an application.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those units that are entire hospitals with 250 beds or over contained in his list of units expressing interest in becoming self-governing.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested. The table lists those units which include entire hospitals with 250 beds or over:

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide references for the passages in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" and associated documents, in which the implications of and safeguards required for primary care or ambulance services if they become self-governing are discussed.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The White Paper discusses self-governing trusts in terms of hospitals or other units providing care or services for patients. But self-governing status could be practical for a wide range of NHS services, and we are considering the implications for particular services in the light of any expressions of interest received.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) under what conditions he will approve applications from ambulance services to become self-governing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under what conditions he will approve applications from primary care services to become self-governing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: We would propose to consider each application on its merits, provided it meets the general criteria outlined in the White Paper.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his timetable for approving or disapproving applications for medical units to become self-governing;

(2) whether units other than 250 bed hospitals will have their applications to become self-governing approved in time to begin in April 1991.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1989]: We would aim to establish the first NHS hospital trust as soon as possible after the necessary legislation receives Royal Assent, so that they can complete their preparations before April 1991, the earliest sensible time to establish the first self-governing hospitals. We would be prepared to consider a wide variety of units among the first self-governing units.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest assessment of the possible spread of the HIV infection within prisons and after the prisoner is released; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

An informed assessment is not possible on the basis of HIV screening and practice.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, at the most recently available date, and for the same months in 1986, 1987 and 1988 how many people of YTS eligible age, registered with jobcentres or the careers service were awaiting an offer of a YTS place; and how many unfilled places on the scheme were available at those dates, broken down for each training agency region and for Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Cope: The Government guarantee the offer of a suitable YTS place to all under-18-year-olds who want one.

As at 31 May 1989, there were some 141,144 unfilled vacancies on YTS in Great Britain. The numbers for each of the Training Agency regions are as follows:

	Numbers
Scotland	13,770
Northern	8,910
North West	17,822

	Numbers
Yorkshire and Humberside	16,518
West Midlands	24,343
Wales	4,454
East Midlands	16,796
South West	11,500
South East	18,267
London	8,764

These figures far exceed the demand for places. Young people have a good choice of training opportunities. It is not possible to compare the current situation with that in previous years when the YTS guarantee was of the offer of a suitable place by Christmas to any of that year's school leavers who were unemployed.

Departmental Expenditure Plans

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the change in the expenditure plans for his Department for 1989-90 from the 1988-89 estimated outturn will be (a) in percentage terms and (b) after adjustment for the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Cope: The 1988-89 estimated outturn for my Department is 2·8 per cent. lower than the 1987-88 outturn. After adjustment for the gross domestic product deflator, the 1988-89 estimated outturn is £289 million (8·5 per cent.) lower than the 1987-88 outturn.

Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total numbers of people who completed courses at employment rehabilitation centres in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage in each year subsequently (a) obtained employment or (b) entered a course of training.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of people who completed courses with the employment rehabilitation service in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1984-85	12,000
1985-86	13,440
1986-87	14,790
1987-88	16,000
1988-89	26,000

The percentage in each year who either obtained employment or entered a course of training was as follows:

	Employment/ Community Programme	Training/YTS
1984-85	29	9
1985-86	34	10
1986-87	39	10
1987-88	41	10
1988-89[1]	40	17

[1] 1 April—31 August 1988 only.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average length of attendance at employment rehabilitation centres in each of the last five years; and what was the average per capita cost to his Department.

Mr. Nicholls: The average length of attendance on courses run by the employment rehabilitation service in each of the last five years and the average per capita cost to the Department was as follows:

	Average length of attendance	Average per capita cost
1984-85	35 days	2,287
1985-86	32 days	2,214
1986-87	32 days	2,332
1987-88	30 days	1,250
1988-89[1]	17 days	[2]886

[1] 1 April—31 August 1988 only
[2] Provisional figure.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on employment rehabilitation centres in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage in each year was received in grants from the European social fund.

Mr. Nicholls: As far as expenditure figures for the employment rehabilitation service are concerned I refer to the reply given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on Wednesday 24 May 1989 at column 576.

European social fund claims made in report of the employment rehabilitation service resulted in the following grants to HM Government:

1984	6,144,397
1985	8,358,625
1986	2,710,925
1987	3,193,687
1988	2,667,794

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what outcome measures of rehabilitation are used by his Department to assess the effectiveness of the employment services for people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The outcome measures used to assess the effectiveness of the employment rehabilitation service are as follows:

(i) Total number of courses;
(ii) Total number of clients attending courses;
(iii) Clients with disabilities expressed as a percentage of the total client group;
(iv) The percentage of clients who proceed to rehabilitation following an assessment course;
(v) Average cost per disabled client;
(vi) Average cost per week per disabled client;
(vii) Average resettlement rate into employment or training;
(viii) Average cost per disabled client resettled into employment or training.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job vacancies in information technology industries were registered in the Bristol travel-to-work area at the latest available date, and two years earlier.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons have been disentitled from receiving unemployment benefit where they have been deemed to be unemployed without just cause since October 1988 (a) in England and Wales, and (b) in unemployment benefit offices in Hackney; and, in each case, if he will state the percentage of cases of which decisions were taken by adjudicating officers to suspend benefit for less than the maximum 26 weeks.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

Figures on the number of persons disqualified for leaving their employment voluntarily without just cause in the unemployment benefit offices in Hackney are not collected separately, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information requested on the percentage of claimants disqualified for less than the statutory period of 26 weeks is not collected. However, the Department of Social Security has undertaken a survey to establish the proportion of claims which are disqualified for the maximum period. The results are at present being analysed and will be published shortly.

The number of claimants disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit because they left employment voluntarily without just cause for the period 1 July 1988 to 31 March 1989 in England and Wales was 156,683.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to finance the expenditure in connection with the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Cope: The expenses will be covered by receipts from the sale. Parliamentary approval for the new service will be sought in a new token Supply Estimate (Class VII, Vote 5) for the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency, to be presented in the Summer Supplementary Estimates round, seeking provision for preliminary expenses and token provision for the main expenses. Later in the year parliamentary approval will be sought for the substantive provision for the main expenses of the sale. Pending the necessary approval urgent expenditure on fees for professional advice, the first tranche of which is estimated to be £250,000, will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Mental Handicap (Vocational Training)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the first European national conference for vocational training for mental handicap in Maastricht, in April; what official representation attended the conference from the United Kingdom; and if he will place in the Library any papers resulting from the conference.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The United Kingdom Government were not invited to send representatives. I understand that two officials from the Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development attended, though not in an official capacity.

Claimants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if benefit officers or staff, including fraud officers and claimant advisers, have targets for numbers of claimants who cease to claim or are removed from benefit.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 June 1989]: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Level Crossings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths and injuries there have been at level crossings, by type of crossing, in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; whether there are any limits on the speed of trains at each such type of level crossing; and how many of the incidents in each year resulting in death and injury involved collision with road vehicles.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total number of accidents	Type of Crossing
		AHB		AOCL		Controlled
		Deaths	Injuries	Deaths	Injuries	Deaths	Injuries
1984	1	—	1	—	—	—	—
1985	2	—	—	—	4	—	—
1986	1	—	—	—	—	2	—
1987	3	—	—	3	1	—	—
1988	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1989	2	—	—	1	3	—	—

AOCL = Automatic open crossing locally monitored
AHB = Automatic half-barrier

All these accidents resulted from collision with road vehicles. In all cases the speed of trains was limited. The limit varies according to local conditions.

Vocational Rehabilitation

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is satisfied with the integration of vocational rehabilitation with both the structure and administration of social security in Northern Ireland; what action he is taking to improve co-ordination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The Department of Health and Social Services and the Department of Economic Development have agreed arrangements whereby people receiving social security benefits may participate in a rehabilitation programme and continue to receive benefit for a period of up to four weeks. If at the end of this initial period a person is considered suitable for full-time training, payment of benefit ceases and is replaced by a training allowance, payable at the rate of the previous benefit plus a premium of £10 a week. On completion of training, payment of benefit will resume if the normal conditions are still satisfied. The rules governing people's entitlement both during and after training will continue as at present.

The need for informal co-ordination between Departments in providing help for the disabled will be examined as part of the Government's consideration of the results of the current survey of the disabled in Northern Ireland.

Glen House

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which adjoining property owners have been formally notified of the planning application No. 0339 to develop lands at Glen house, Mountain road-Crawfordsburn road, Newtownards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The following occupiers were neighbour notified in relation to planning application No. 0339—Nos 3, 5, 7 and 9 Mountain road and No. 41 Crawfordsburn road, Newtownards.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which adjoining property owners have been formally notified of the planning application No. 0340 to develop lands at Glen house, Mountain Road-Crawfordsburn road, Newtownards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The following occupiers were neighbour notified in relation to planning application No. 0340—Nos. 7, 9, 11, 13, 15, 17, 41, 43, 45, 47 and 49 Mountain road, Newtownards. The occupiers of Nos. 41 and 49 Crawfordsburn road, Newtownards should also have been notified but, due to an oversight, they were not. However, both these occupiers contacted the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland) about the proposed development and were obviously aware of it despite the lack of neighbour notifications.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which adjoining property owners have been formally notified of the planning application No. 0336 to develop lands at Glen house, Mountain road-Crawfordsburn road, Newtownards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The following occupiers were neighbour notified in relation to planning application No. 0336—Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 Mountain road, and No. 55 Crawfordsburn road, Newtownards.

SCOTLAND

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will detail the total monies so far paid out, to individuals and local authorities, respectively, as a result of the severe weather conditions earlier in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 27 April details of the special financial assistance being made available, and invited claims from local authorities and those eligible for the higher rates of agricultural grants which were announced at the same time. To date, my officials have held discussions with several local authorities about the possibility of assistance, and a number of inquiries about agricultural grants have been made by persons affected by the severe weather in February. To date, however, no claims under these measures have been received, and therefore no payments have been made.

Health Screening

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his Department's current priorities for screening in health care in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current priorities are the establishment of systematic programmes to screen women aged between 20 and 60 at five-yearly intervals for cervical cancer and women aged between 50 and 64 at three-yearly intervals for breast cancer. Computerised call and recall systems will enable health boards to invite all women in the eligible age groups to attend for a cervical smear test by December 1993 and for a breast screening test by March 1994.

In addition, screening of all pregnant women is carried out for the purpose of detecting fetal abnormalities. Following birth, children are screened for inherited or developmental conditions and this is continued throughout the school years. Since 1 December 1988 screening for HIV infection has been available for all women attending ante-natal clinics in Edinburgh and Dundee.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or campaigns planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 April 1989]: My Department was conducting publicity campaigns on school boards and the community charge during April. They were scheduled to run from 9 April to 6 May and from 3 to 28 April respectively. Both involved television advertising. A campaign for road safety was shown on television from 6 March to 8 April.

Planning of publicity campaigns for the whole of the first three months of 1989-90 is not yet complete.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the findings of the surveys carried out in the Scottish new towns on the question of the residents views on the disposal of the development corporations housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 June 1989]: This matter will be covered in the forthcoming White Paper on the Scottish new towns.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plessey plc

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how, in the event that GEC/Siemens acquire the Plessey company, he proposes to ensure continued competitive solutions in the research and development field.

Mr. Maude: In its report on the proposed acquitition of Plessey by GEC Siemens, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission concluded that the effect of the proposed acquisition on research and development would not operate against the public interest. In accordance with the Commission's recommendations, however, my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to seek undertakings, amongst others, that would satisfy United Kingdom national security requirements as to the ownership and management of defence, research and development and semiconductor activities. Negotiations on undertakings continue.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how, in the event that GEC/Siemens acquire the Plessey company, he plans to ensure that Plessey radar and Plessey defence systems can compete equally with GEC companies.

Mr. Maude: Following publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the proposed acquisition of Plessey by GEC Siemens, my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has made it clear that the proposed acquisition should not proceed until satisfactory undertakings have been obtained from GEC and Siemens, including undertakings from GEC that GEC should not acquire any interest in or influence or control over the management of the Plessey radar and defence systems businesses. Negotiations on undertakings continue.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what measures are being taken to safeguard the position of Britain's base of enabling technology in semiconductors in the event that GEC/Siemens succeed in taking over Plessey;

(2) what measures are being taken to safeguard the position of the United Kingdom as the European leader in application specific integrated circuits in the event that GEC/Siemens succeed in taking over Plessey.

Mr. Maude: In its report on the proposed acquisition of Plessey by GEC Siemens, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission concluded that the effect of the proposed acquisition on electronic components would not operate against the public interest. In accordance with the Commission's recommendations, however, my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to seek undertakings, amongst others, that would satisfy United Kingdom national security requirements as to the ownership and management of defence, research and development and semiconductor activities. Negotiations on undertakings continue.

"Open for Business"

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response there has been to his Department's European "Open for Business" campaign.

Mr. Maude: The response has been huge. Our weekly survey indicates that 90 per cent. of business throughout the country is now aware of the single market and around 50 per cent. is taking action or considering steps to prepare for it. DTI has received over 230,000 requests for information on the single market since the campaign was launched in March 1988, including over 132,000 calls to our 1992 hotline. In addition, DTI Ministers and officials have spoken at more than 1,000 single market conferences since the campaign began and are committed to over 130 other single market engagements during the remainder of this year.

Imports (Consumer Goods)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the 1987-88 imports figure was accounted for by consumer goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Consumer goods (1) accounted for 18 per cent. of United Kingdom imports on an overseas trade statistics basis in each of the years 1987 and 1988.

(1) Part of SITC 7 and 8, based on the United Nations broad economic categories.

Refrigeration Industry

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with representatives of the refrigeration industry about the effects of restrictions on CFC consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry held a meeting with my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East and a delegation from the industry on 7 June.

Additionally, officials have had a number of meetings with the industry during the last two years to discuss the implications of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, which control the use of chlorofluorocarbons used by the refrigeration, air conditioning and other industries; the extent to which savings in the use of these substances may be made; and the forseeable effects of a strengthened protocol.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many responses he received to the consultative document, "Possible Changes to the Financial Services Act 1986", published on 1 March; how many respondents supported the proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department received responses to the consultation document entitled "Possible Changes to the Financial Services Act 1986" from 67 organisations, companies and individuals. The document invited comments on a number of possibilities, not all of which were related, and many of the responses were also wide-ranging. It would not therefore be meaningful to analyse them in the way requested.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent trade with eastern Europe, excluding the USSR, has increased in the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom trade with eastern Europe, excluding the USSR, is given in the following table:

United Kingdom trade with eastern Europe excluding USSR 1979 to 1988

Value in £ million

	Imports	Exports	Balance
1979	563·7	549·6	−14·1
1980	492·5	673·4	+180·9
1981	398·3	600·1	+201·8
1982	484·3	510·2	+25·9
1983	571·4	503·8	−67·6
1984	902·8	572·8	−330·0
1985	851·7	649·4	−202·3
1986	827·4	626·2	−201·2
1987	825·5	625·3	−200·2
1988	859·3	683·9	−175·4

Paperless Share Transactions

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will state the Government's intentions for facilitating paperless transactions and holdings in shares.

Mr. Maude: I announced on 1 December at column 369 that I was considering proposing changes to the law that would, if both the company and the shareholder wished, enable shares to be held on computer, without certificates, and to be transferred without the need for paper transfer forms. This process, sometimes referred to as dematerialisation, is important for London's leading position as an international trading market. Paperless schemes will also offer important benefits for wider share ownership by providing a more efficient service to investors.

I issued a consultative document on the proposed changes and I am grateful to all those individuals and organisations who responded. It is essential that any schemes finally developed meet the legitimate needs of all potential users and I welcome the progress made by the international stock exchange as a result of its recent and continuing consultations.

The moves towards paperless trading are intended to reduce transaction risks and costs. In considering possible changes to legislation it is essential to strike the right balance between the interests of shareholders, of companies and of the financial institutions. I have also borne in mind that schemes will develop over time and that competitors may emerge with different approaches from the nominee-based scheme currently being considered by the stock exchange. Against this background it is clearly important that the framework should be flexible.

I hope to bring forward proposals in the form of amendments to the Companies Bill. These will be intended to ensure that the move towards paperless trading does not alter significantly the effect in practice of current company, investor protection and insolvency law. In order to achieve this the Secretary of State would be empowered to make regulations, subject to affirmative resolution, which would then provide a framework within which authorised systems would operate. The purpose of the regulations would be:

(a) to facilitate the introduction and operation of computer based systems for recording the holding of securities (or interests in them) and for their transfer;

(b) to ensure that, as far as reasonably practicable, investors, issuers (ie companies) and other are in a corresponding position under such a computer-based system as they are under the present paper-based system.

The regulations will make provisions inter alia for ensuring that authorised systems and their participants are properly regulated. They will also ensure that the speed and ease with which information about the identities of owners of shares is made available is comparable to present arrangements; and that investors continue to enjoy broadly the same rights as they do now.

Electricity Boards

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received regarding alleged abuses of Fair Trading and Competition Acts by electricity boards.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Three.

Eastern Electricity Board

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will instruct the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate the current retail practices of the Eastern electricity board.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 12 June 1989]: It is for the Director General of Fair Trading to decide whether to carry out an investigation to establish whether someone is engaging in an anti-competitive practice. I understand that the Director General is following up complaints from retailers of electrical hardware.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those who have made representations regarding alleged anti-competitive practices by the Eastern electricity board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 12 June 1989]: No: I treat such representations in confidence.

Beer (MMC Report)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce his decision on implementing the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply of beer.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 12 June 1989]: I made a preliminary statement about the scope of application of some of the proposed measures on 8 June at column 229. I am anxious to settle the remaining issues quickly.

THE ARTS

School Parties (Museum Charges)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Arts which national museums impose charges for school parties; and what advice he issues museums in respect of educational charges.

Mr. Luce: The National Maritime museum and Merseyside Maritime museum are the only national museums to levy charges for school parties. Both operate concessionary charge schemes.

The policy on charging educational parties is a matter for the director and trustees of each individual museum.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inner London Education Authority (Women Employees)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received suggesting that the draft regulations on redundancy and detriment compensation discriminate against women employees of the Inner London Education Authority; and what has been his response.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is currently considering representations from the TUC on this point.

Further Education (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many 16-year-olds stay on in education after this age in the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Jackson: In 1987-88 there were approximately 11·5 thousand full-time students (a participation rate of 51 per cent.) and 1·5 thousand part-time students (a participation rate of 7 per cent.).

Scottish Qualifications

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to approve Scottish qualifications for use in maintained schools in England in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes. I intend that qualifications certificated by the Scottish Examination Board should be included in the supplementary list of qualifications approved for use in maintained schools in England in 1990 and 1991 which will be issued later this summer and which was foreshadowed in the Department's 31 May circular (11/89).

ENERGY

Wind Turbines

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the load factor achieved by the three wind turbines at Carmarthen bay (a) for 1988 and (b) to date during 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The vertical axis wind turbine machine had a load factor of 13·3 per cent. for 1988 and 17·3 per cent. for the first quarter of 1989. The machine is being used as a test bed to support the VAWT development programme and, since 1987, has been operating in a different mode from that originally intended. Over this period, it has given satisfactory performance with an availability of 93 per cent.

The Howden HWT300 machine has had a number of teething troubles with its control system, and representative operating data are not yet available; it is hoped that suitable data will be acquired over the next year. The wind energy group MS3 machine is not yet fully commissioned, and load factor data are therefore not yet available.

Energy Industries (Fatalities)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report annual totals of fatalities since 1970 in the United Kingdom energy industries, showing separately the figures for (a) coal, (b) civil nuclear, and (c) offshore oil and gas.

Mr. Parkinson: The figures are as follows:

Fatal injuries to employees in the energy sector
Date of Accident (calendar year except where otherwise indicated)

	[1] Coal Mining	[2] Civil Nuclear	[3] Offshore Oil and Gas
1970	91	—	1
1971	72	—	4
1972	64	—	3
1973	80	—	3
1974	48	—	12
1975	64	—	10
1976	50	2	17
1977	40	1	11
1978	63	2	4
1979	46	—	10
1980	42	2	4
1981	35	2	6
1982	38	2	14
1983	30	2	10
1984	19	—	13
1985	25	1	8
1986	[4]18	1	3
1987	[4]12	—	6
1988	[4]20	—	[5]173

[1] Reported to the Health and Safety Executive's inspectorate of mines and quarries (figures include both British Coal and private licensed mines)

[2] None of the civil nuclear fatalities involved exposure to radiation.

[3] The statistics include all fatalities on or near installations and pipeline works or on attendant vessels in the course of any operation undertaken in connection with an installation. They also include fatalities in respect of pipelines or in the course of pipeline works. Fatalities involving helicopters flying to or from installations are only included if they occur in the vicinity of the installation.

[4] Figures for coal fatalities compiled on a financial year basis since April 1986. There were a further seven fatalities between 1 January 1986 and 31 March 1986.

[5] 167 of these fatalities relate to the Piper Alpha disaster.

Harwell (Laboratories)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what new laboratories or existing laboratory upgrading and extensions have been built since 1979 at the Atomic Energy Research Establishment, operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at Harwell; which of these have been paid for from a parliamentary vote; and which paid for by commercial contracts signed by the UKAEA or AEA technology.

Mr. Parkinson: Since 1979 the Harwell laboratory has completed seven major laboratory schemes. Details and information on how they were funded is as follows:

Description	Funding provided by
Electron Linear Accelerator facility	Vote
Extension to Environmental and Medical Sciences building	Vote
New and improved facilities for handling radioactive wastes	Vote

Description	Funding provided by
Thoria Pelleting plant	Industrial customer
Refurbishment of Post Irradiation Examination Laboratory	[1]Capital
Improvements to Biochemistry Building	[1]Capital

[1] Since 1986, when the finances of the UKAEA were put on a trading fund basis, capital investment which is intended to serve several research and development customers has been capitalised and is funded corporately within the AEA's external financing limit.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what period of notice the United Kingdom is required to give the safeguards authorities at the International Atomic Energy Agency and the European Atomic Energy Agency, Euratom, if nuclear material under safeguards is to be withdrawn from safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom is required to give to Euratom and the IAEA 10 days notice of withdrawal of material from the terms of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA agreement unless otherwise specified in the relevant facality attachment.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what the basic technical characteristics of the Sellafield reprocessing facilities were submitted to Euratom for the purposes of developing safeguards arrangements for Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Basic technical characteristics for different material balance areas at Sellafield have been formally submitted to Euratom at different times in addition to Euratom inspectors obtaining the technical characteristics during inspections. The development of safeguards approaches is mostly influenced by that latter knowledge.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the particular safeguards provisions for the Sellafield reprocessing facility were (a) first agreed and (b) first implemented; and if he will make a statement on the implementations of the safeguards arrangements at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Four particular safeguards provisions were agreed and came into force in 1988. The others are in an advanced stage of consultation, to come into force progressively.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the negotiations to replenish the international fund for agricultural development; and what will be the British contribution.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am glad to say that IFAD members successfully agreed early on 8 June to replenish the fund with at least $523 million so as to cover its operations up to 30 June 1992. The final total, to be fixed by the end of September, will depend on how far the group of non-oil developing countries can raise their pledges towards $75 million, in response to an offer by western donors to match this by 3:1. If that figure is reached, the replenishment will come to $611 million, corresponding to over $730 million for a full three year period. But the level already secured, with reflows to the fund, is enough to allow it to continue operations at a reasonable level.

The British contribution, like that of other western donors, will only be finalised at the end of September. I shall report it to the House thereafter, and it will naturally be subject to parliamentary approval.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the anticipated effect on the Exchequer of raising the higher rate of taxation to 50 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The yield in a full year at 1989-90 levels of income of increasing the higher rate of income tax to 50 per cent. would be about £2½ billion. The estimate includes the consequential effect on the yield of capital gains tax. It is partly based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and is provisional.

Pension's (Civil Servants)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the total cost of pensions paid to civil servants in each of the last five years.

Mr. Brooke: Pensions paid to civil servants, along with certain other pension payments (including pensions paid to the dependants of former civil servants), are a charge on the civil superannuation vote. It is not possible to separate out the costs of the other pension payments but, with the exception of pensions paid to the dependants of former civil servants, the costs are small. Total pension costs, as recorded in the Appropriation Accounts for subhead A1 of the vote, in each of the last five years are as follows:

1983-84	855,079
1984-85	931,344
1985-86	1,017,876
1986-87	1,112,685
1987-88	1,163,226

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average pension and lump sum paid to civil servants in retirement after 40 years service in each grade from grade 6 and above.

Mr. Brooke: A civil servant with 40 years' service and paid at the scale maximum of the respective grade (excluding London weighting where payable) would qualify on retirement for a pension and lump sum as follows:

	Pension £	Lump sum £
Grade 6	14,085	42,255
Grade 5	15,801	47,403
Grade 4	17,707	53,122
Grade 3	19,500	58,500
Grade 2	24,000	72,000
Grade 1A	31,375	94,125
Grade 1	34,250	102,750

Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the reduction in annual liability to (a) capital gains tax and (b) capital transfer tax in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 as against the 1978-79 indexed regime, specifying, in each case, the total and average reduction per taxpayer as well as the number of taxpayers in each year.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Latest estimates for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are as follows:

	Capital gains tax	Capital transfer tax/ Inheritance tax
Reduction, compared with indexed 1978-79 regime, in:
Total liability (£ million)
1988-89	1,250	600
1989-90	1,350	670
Average liability[1] (£)
1988-89	1,900	8,500
1989-90	1,900	9,500
Taxpayer numbers (thousands)
1978-79 indexed regime
1988-89	650	70
1989-90	700	70
Present regime
1988-89	145	24
1989-90	160	24

[1]The reduction in the average liability is calculated using the estimated number of taxpayers under the 1978-79 indexed regime.

The figures for capital gains tax exclude capital gains realised by companies and taxed within corporation tax. For each tax, the 1988-89 and 1989-90 tax bases are taken as given. It is not possible to determine to what extent changes to the taxes between 1978-79 and the present may have affected the levels of transfers and disposals. The comparisons can be regarded as no more than indicative of the orders of magnitude involved.

Public Safety Films

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the title and topic of those Government public safety films and announcements that have been screened on television in each of the last six months.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 June 1989]: Details of Government public safety films and announcements produced through the Central Office of Information on behalf of other Government Departments in each of the last six months for which data are available are as follows:

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 13 March, Official Report, column 61, if he is yet in a position to inform the House of the outcome of the discussions on European Community proposals for imposing value added tax on goods and clothing sold in charity shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No. The Commission announced its revised thinking on indirect taxation in the single market on 17 May. It now accepts that some zero rates may be retained. This is clearly a step forward and in indication of our firm stance and we welcome it. However, the Commission's new proposals need much more clarification before we can take a view on them. Fortunately because changes to EC tax law require the unanimous agreement of the member states, there is no question of the Commission's proposals being forced upon us.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been decided to date in the discussions in the Economic and Finance Committee on the approximation of value added tax rates and the harmonisation of customs and excise duties: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 June 1989]: The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers have discussed these matters, which will be discussed again at a future ECOFIN Council. No decisions have been taken.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Regional Passport Offices

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider meeting the seasonal pressure of applications by the establishment of passport office facilities in Leeds for those seeking passports who live east of the Pennines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There are at present six regional passport offices in the United Kingdom. Since the great majority of passport applications are usually dealt with by post, the location of the issuing office is not normally a significant factor in determining the speed of service. We shall, however, be reviewing the location and number of offices later this year. My right hon. Friend announced on 6 June in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) at columns 47-8 a number of measures which are being taken to ease the present problem of delays at the passport offices.

Handel Telephone Line System

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect problems with the Handel telephone line system will have on the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation's ability to activate the national network of air-raid sirens from July of this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Improvements which British Telecom are making to the telephone network, which carries links in the warning system, will not affect the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation's ability to activate the national network of sirens.

Electronic Surveillance Schemes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that a refusal to agree to participate in an electronic surveillance scheme will not be held to be a breach of bail conditions.

Mr. John Patten: During the trial schemes electronic monitoring will not be offered to defendants unwilling to participate: the question of subsequent breach of a bail condition should not arise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the impact on the incidence of domestic violence or alcohol consumption of persons participating in electronic surveillance schemes.

Mr. John Patten: None.

AIDS

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons who have been prisoners and subsequently released have been diagnosed as HIV positive;

(2) how many prisoners currently in Her Majesty's prisons have been diagnosed as HIV positive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 12 June 1989 the prison population of England and Wales included 63 prisoners reported as having been identified as HIV antibody positive. A total of 174 such prisoners had been released since reporting began in March 1985.

Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has concluded his consideration of the conviction of Mr. Colin Wallace for manslaughter in the light of evidence of a conspiracy to pervert the course of justice set out in the book entitled "Who Framed Colin Wallace" by Mr. Paul Foot, referred to in his written reply to the hon. Member for Brent, East of 15 May, Official Report, column 96.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering the material contained in Mr. Foot's book. When this has been carefully examined we will decide whether any action is called for in respect of Mr. Wallace's conviction.

War Crimes Inquiry

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a statement about the Government's response to the war crimes inquiry.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 8 June 1989 at column 215.

Police Manpower (Derbyshire)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the figure for police manpower in Derbyshire in 1979; and what is the latest figure available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Police strength: Derbyshire

	Numbers
31 December 1979	1,757
30 April 1989	1,798

Immigration

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the use of DNA testing in immigration cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I announced in July 1988 that DNA profiling appeared to be the most accurate available method of determining parentage in immigration cases, and that we would continue to accept the results of DNA tests commissioned by applicants themselves. Since then, many hundreds of cases have been satisfactorily determined on that basis. In the light of the experience we have gained from this, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have concluded that there is scope for introducing DNA testing into the entry clearance process more generally as a means of resolving relationship disputes. We have therefore set in hand the necessary arrangements with the view to the implementation of a Government scheme later this year in relation to first-time settlement applicants.

DNA testing will not be offered as a matter of routine. We envisage that entry clearance officers will offer to arrange tests, with the consent of the applicant and sponsor, in cases where the relevant relationships could not easily be demonstrated by other means. If an applicant or his sponsor declines to undergo a test that would not of itself be a ground for refusing the application. But if an entry clearance officer is not satisfied as to relationship on the basis of the evidence before him, these arrangements will provide applicants with an opportunity to resolve the matter by taking a DNA test.

DNA tests will be carried out, as at present, by independent scientific experts on a commercial basis. The level of the fee to be charged for application will need to strike a balance between not imposing too great a burden either on the individual applicant or on the taxpayer. My right hon. Friend and I will work up arrangements for financing a centrally-organised scheme on this basis.

A number of cases have come to light where an applicant previously refused entry as a child (frequently after appeal to the independent appellate authorities), on the ground that there was no satisfactory evidence as to relationship, is now able to establish relationship by means of DNA evidence but is now over 18 and does not satisfy the requirements in the rules relating to the admission of adults.

I do not believe that it would now be right to waive those requirements as a matter of course in all such cases, irrespective of the applicant's present age or circumstances. Previous decisions, including those of the appellate authorities, were taken in good faith on the basis of the information available at the time. There can be no automatic presumption that applicants now established as related after all should be admitted regardless of current circumstances. We have always distinguished between children, who are readily admitted to join parents here, and adults, who will be admitted to join parents or relatives only in certain exceptional circumstances. Someone who was refused admission as a child when DNA was not available but has later established the claimed relationship should not by virtue of that fact automatically qualify for admission if the other qualification, namely childhood, is no longer fulfilled.

I do not propose any change in the rules which would have the effect of blurring this fundamental distinction, which has been a settled feature of our immigration policy for many years. In many cases over-age applicants are likely to have settled into independent adult life and may also have married and established a family of their own overseas and I do not propose to waive the requirements of the rules in these cases.

However, in the context of outstanding and future re-applications I am prepared to consider waiving the requirements of the rules in certain circumstances. To be eligible for such consideration a re-applicant aged 18 or over will have to show:

(a) that he was refused entry clearance as a child on relationship grounds;
(b) that DNA evidence establishes that he was, after all, related as claimed;
(c) that he is still wholly or mainly dependent on his sponsor in the United Kingdom; and
(d) that there are compassionate circumstances in his case.

I shall not regard the fact that a re-applicant was refused entry clearance as a child on relationship grounds on any earlier occasion and was therefore unable to join his sponsor in the United Kingdom as satisfying the requirement that there be compassionate circumstances.

In deciding whether to waive the requirements of the rules in cases which fall into this category I will consider all circumstances of the case including in particular:

(a) the degree and nature of the dependency;
(b) the extent and nature of the compassionate circumstances;
(c) the re-applicant's present age and marital status;
(d) whether other close family members, such as siblings, are already settled in the United Kingdom;
(e) the lapse of time between the original application and the re-application.

In considering the compassionate circumstances of the case, I will attach greater weight to compassionate circumstances relating to the situation of the re-applicant abroad than I will to those relating to the situation of his sponsor in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to lay before Parliament changes to the immigration rules.

Mr. Hurd: I have today laid before Parliament a statement of changes in the immigration rules in consolidated form. The main changes of content are the introduction of a visa requirement for nationals of Turkey and Haiti; curtailing the ability of visa nationals to switch after arrival from visitor to student status; and a provision relating to the status of husbands of women admitted for employment or business. The changes are due to enter into force with effect from 8 July 1989, except for the visa requirement for Turkish nationals, which takes effect from 23 June 1989. A full explanatory statement listing all the changes of content and the reasons for them is available in the Vote Office.

Dogs

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to strengthen the law on dangerous dogs.

Mr. Hurd: Under the Dogs Act 1871, if a court finds that a dog is dangerous and not kept under proper control it may order the dog to be kept under proper control or destroyed.

My right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland and I have concluded that the penalties by which the Act is enforced ought to be strengthened. Subject to there being a legislative opportunity, we have in mind (i) giving the court a new power to order that the dog is destroyed by a person nominated by the court; (ii) substantially increasing the penalties for failing to comply with an order either to keep the dog under proper control or to destroy the dog; and (iii) giving the court a further power to ban the person against whom an order is made from owning or keeping a dog.

Probation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have for making a more concerted national network of probation service projects for offenders, in place of the current localised system.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Steps are being taken to introduce more consistency in the work of the probation service and to disseminate good practice to all probation areas. National standards for the operation of community service orders were brought into effect in April, and all probation areas have been asked to develop action plans for the supervision of young adult offenders within guidelines issued by the Home Office. Ten probation areas have been invited to set up intensive probation projects which will be monitored centrally. Practice guidelines were issued to the probation service in 1988 on accommodation for offenders and the care for young offenders sentenced to custody.

The Government are considering developments in the probation service in the light of proposals made in the Carlisle report on parole and the Home Office's Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community".

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eastern Europe

14. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about British relations with eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our relations with the countries of eastern Europe are as varied as the countries themselves. We naturally have the closest relations with those whose systems and values come closest to our own. We welcome the substantial steps towards freedom and democracy taken recently in Hungary and Poland.

Cocaine

16. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts have been made to co-ordinate international action against traffic in cocaine.

Mr. Eggar: We discussed the growing threat from cocaine with our European partners at an extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Council of Europe's Pompidou Group in London on 18-19 May. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, announced our willingness to host an international conference in London in 1990 on demand reduction in the context of the threat from cocaine.

Anglo-Soviet Relations

17. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Soviet relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the last four years there has been a major improvement in Anglo-Soviet relations. We have developed a worthwhile political dialogue and many useful lower level contacts. But the recent expulsions have shown that serious problems remain in some areas.

George Samoilovich

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian Government about their failure to grant an exit visa to the family of George Samoilovich.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow has asked the Soviet authorities for a full clarification of the Samoilovich family's position.

Kurds (Asylum)

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Iraq and Turkey concerning Kurdish asylum seekers.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made no recent representations to the Iraqi or Turkish Governments concerning specific Kurdish asylum cases though no one can be in any doubt about our concern over human rights and the problem of Kurdish refugees.

Namibia

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received with regard to the implementation of United Nations resolution 435 in Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We receive regular reports from our diplomatic missions in Southern Africa and are in frequent contact with all those involved in the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence.

22. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations and South Africa regarding the timetabled withdrawal of South African troops from Namibia in keeping with United Nations resolution 435 on Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: The phased withdrawal of South African forces from Namibia is proceeding in accordance with the United Nations plan. We have urged the South African Government to ensure that this remains the case, and fully support the efforts of the United Nations Secretary General and his special representative.

48. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the United Nations special representative for Namibia; and what was discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has not recently met the United Nations special representative for Namibia. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met Mr Ahtisaari in Windhoek on 1 April and discussed with him the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence.

53. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the implementation of the settlement in Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We welcome the recent progress on the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence. Agreement has been reached on the repeal of discriminatory legislation and the declaration of an amnesty. The repatriation of Namibian refugees began on 12 June. South African forces are being withdrawn from Namibia according to the United Nations plan.

M. Jacques Delors

23. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met M. Jacques Delors and what was discussed.

27. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Affairs when he last met M. Jacques Delors; and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met M. Delors at the Foreign Affairs Council on 12 June. I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply of today to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) reporting the outcome.

Austria

24. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to have discussions with the Austrian Foreign Secretary to encourage Austria to submit an application to join the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Chalker: It is for the Austrian Government alone to decide whether to submit an application to join the European Community, taking account of the economic and political obligations of membership.

Middle East

25. Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process.

32. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the peace process in the middle east.

34. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process following the visit of the Israeli Prime Minister to London.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Shamir's election proposals are a step forward. It is now for the Israelis to develop them as part of a process leading to negotiations on the basis of land for peace, and for the PLO to respond constructively.

49. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Soviet involvement in the middle east peace process.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome all efforts, including those of the Soviet Union, to build confidence between the parties to the Arab/Israel dispute and to prepare the way for negotiations. Improved Soviet/Israeli relations can contribute to this.

63. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet Mr. Yasser Arafat to assist the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are certainly ready for further meetings with the PLO when they can serve a useful purpose. But my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans at present for a meeting with Mr. Arafat.

64. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards peace in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Shamir's election proposals are a step forward. It is now for the Israelis to develop them as part of a process leading to negotiations on the basis of land for peace, and for the PLO to respond constructively.

Human Rights (Romania)

26. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government about the abuse of human rights in Romania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There has been no improvement in the Romanian Government's lamentable human rights practices. My right hon. and learned Friend raised this matter with the Romanian ambassador on 9 May.

The leader of our delegation to the Paris Conference on the human dimension of the CSCE drew attention to Romania's deplorable human rights record in his opening statement on 31 May.

EC Commissioners

28. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the British members of the European Commission; and what issues will be discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet the British members of the European Commission, but looks forward to maintaining contact with them and their fellow Commissioners.

Gibraltar

29. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations are held with the Government of Gibraltar about reforms within the European Community which may affect their future.

Mrs. Chalker: We are in regular contact with the Gibraltar Government over the full range of EC matters which concern Gibraltar.

NATO Summit

30. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on developments at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement to the House on 6 June.

Palestine

31. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the rôle of the United Kingdom with regard to the achievement of Palestinian self-determination.

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall continue to work for a just and durable solution to the Arab/Israel dispute which takes account of the Palestinians' right of self-determination as well as Israel's right to security.

Argentina

33. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: We remain committed to seeking more normal relations with Argentina, while upholding our commitment to the Falkland Islanders. We believe it should be possible for both countries to benefit by working together on practical matters such as trade, air and sea links and fisheries conservation, leaving the issue of sovereignty, which most divides us, aside.

Since 1982 we have accordingly taken a series of initiatives, but the Argentine response so far has been disappointing. Nevertheless our offers remain open, and will still be on the table when the new President assumes power.

55. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any message has been received by Her Majesty's Government from the new President of Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: No; in any case, the President elect Mr. Menem has not yet taken office.

Foreign Affairs Council

35. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the last meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council.

Mrs. Chalker: The main item at the Foreign Affairs Council on 12 June was preparations for the Madrid European Council. A full statement on the Foreign Affairs Council is being deposited in the Library of the House today.

London Information Forum

36. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the London Information Forum.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 19 May at column 329. The view then expressed that the London Information Forum was a success has been borne out by comments received subsequently.

European Foreign Policies

37. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands). I next expect to discuss political co-operation matters with them during the European Council in Madrid on 26-27 June.

Human Rights (Romania)

38. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government about human rights abuses in Romania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There has been no improvement in the Romanian Government's lamentable human rights practices. My right hon. and learned Friend raised this matter with the Romanian ambassador on 9 May.

The leader of our delegation to the Paris conference on the human dimension of the CSCE drew attention to Romania's deplorable human rights record in his opening statement on 31 May.

Afghanistan

39. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the current state of the war in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: It has long been our practice to stay in touch with a wide range of Afghan opinion and with other parties interested in Afghanistan. These contacts have confirmed our view that the resolution of the conflict requires the establishment of a truly representative Government in Kabul.

Cocaine

40. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress in initiatives to curb the international cocaine trade.

Mr. Eggar: On 18 May my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced a number of initiatives to help combat the threat from cocaine. These included provision of additional resources to United Nations drugs bodies, establishment of a customs training facility, targeting of overseas assistance on cocaine and the United Kingdom's willingness to host an international conference on demand reduction in the context of the threat from cocaine.

Ethiopia

41. Mr. Brandon Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: The Ethiopian Government reasserted control after an attempted coup by military officers on 16-17 May. They announced on 5 June their readiness to enter into unconditional negotiations on the situation in Eritrea. We regard negotiations to resolve internal conflicts, together with respect for human rights and the adoption of sensible economic policies, as pre-requisites for positive developments in Ethiopia.

Syria

42. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning Britain's relations with Syria.

Mr. Waldegrave: We could not consider restoring diplomatic relations without firm evidence that Syria had given up support for international terrorism.

Single European Market

43. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts his Department is making in promoting the single European market.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and our posts abroad are fully involved in promoting the single European market. British embassies lobby and report on single market measures and also provide a range of services to help British exporters make the most of the growing opportunities.

South Africa

45. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his South African counterpart.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no current plans to do so.

Anglo-Soviet Relations

46. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Soviet relations.

59. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Soviet relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the last four years there has been a major improvement in Anglo-Soviet relations. We have developed a worthwhile and substantive high-level political dialogue. Contacts of all sorts have expanded rapidly, helping to break down the barriers of misunderstanding and distrust. But the recent expulsions have shown that there is still a long way to go before our relations with the Soviet Union reach the level of stability and mutual trust to which we aspire.

Poland

47. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what encouragement and assistance he is giving to the process of Polish economic reconstruction.

50. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what encouragement and assistance he has given to the round table talks in Poland and the process of Polish economic reconstruction.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome recent political events in Poland. Economic reform and adjustment are possible only with the full consent of the people. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told General Jaruzelski on 10 June of the help we are ready to provide: we will support an IMF programme which underpins effective economic reconstruction; we will support rescheduling of 1989 debt payments in the Paris Club; bilaterally we will contribute £5 million per year over five years to provide training and advice to support progress towards democracy and a market economy.

Decision-making

51. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, at the forthcoming European Council, the British Government will make any proposals for improving the quality of European decision-making.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Anglo-Israeli Relations

52. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Israeli relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Relations with Israel are good. We were glad to welcome Mr. Shamir to London last month and look forward to remaining in close touch with him on Arab-Israeli and other issues.

Arab-Israeli Conflict

54. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position regarding the proposal to hold an international conference to resolve the Israeli-Arab conflict and the Palestinian problem in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: An international conference remains the most suitable framework for negotiations between the parties to the Arab-Israeli dispute. We are working to help establish the necessary common ground and confidence between the parties to enable negotiations to begin.

Gulf States

56. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to visit the Gulf states.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

China

57. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on developments in the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State in the House on 6 June on developments in the People's Republic of China.

PLO

58. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the attempts by the Palestinian Liberation Organisation to obtain a quasi-Governmental recognition by membership of various United Nations Organisations.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have not recognised the "state of Palestine" declared by last November's Palestine National Council. Accordingly, we do not believe that "Palestine" satisfies the criteria for membership of UN agencies. We have advised the PLO against pursuing these applications.

Treaty of Rome

60. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given by the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Communities to the activating of article 236 of the treaty of Rome.

Mrs. Chalker: No proposals under article 236 have been put before the Council since the amendment of the treaty of Rome by the Single European Act.

Council of Ministers

61. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the Council of Ministers; and what he expects will be discussed.

44. Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to attend a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council; and what he hopes will be discussed.

Mrs. Chalker My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will next meet his EC counterparts at the Madrid European Council on 26/27 June. The next Foreign Affairs Council will take place on 17/18 July. The agenda is unlikely to be set until nearer the time.

62. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of his discussions with the Nigerian Foreign Minister.

Mrs. Chalker My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and I had talks with Foreign Minister Nwachukwu, held during the state visit of President Babangida, that covered bilateral issues and international developments of mutual interest, focussing in particular on Southern Africa. Our discussions were extremely friendly, reflecting the close and cordial nature of our bilateral relations.

Tibet

65. Mr. Mallin To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed Tibet with a representative of the Chinese Government.

Mr. Eggar I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 April at col 559.

General Wladislaw Sikorski (Remains)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have any plans to return the remains of General Wladislaw Sikorski to Poland in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Waldegrave My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told General Jaruzelski at the weekend that we had reconsidered this question. We felt the time was not yet right. We would continue to review the matter, in the light of the changing situation in Poland.

Russian Diplomats (Expulsion)

Mr David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of the Russian diplomatic mission have been expelled from the United Kingdom since 1970 for engaging in activities incompatible with their status.

Mr. Eggar: Ninety nine; a further 69 Soviet citizens who were not accredited as diplomats have been expelled during the same period.

Agni Missile

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent test launch by India of its Agni missile; whether the missile is considered to have a nuclear capability; and if he proposes to discuss the matter in his next discussions with the Indian Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have noted the successful test launch of the Indian Agni missile. As a founder member of the missile technology control region, we are obviously concerned about the proliferation of ballistic missiles. When the MTCR was established in April 1987, the partners urged all states to adopt the guidelines of the regime.

There have been press reports that Agni is a nuclear —capable missile, although the Indian Prime Minister has stated that it is not a nuclear weapons system. We have no immediate plans for discussions on this matter with the Indian Government but we make our views on non-proliferation clear whenever a suitable opportunity arises.

Immigration Appeals (Bombay)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is he average time from an appeal being submitted to (a) the date of it being set and (b) it being heard at the post in Bombay.

Mr. Eggar: The average waiting time from receipt of an appeal at the deputy British high commission in Bombay to the despatch of the explanatory statement to the independent appellate authority is 11 weeks. The subsequent wait for an appeal hearing to take place in the United Kingdom (not Bombay) is a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Disasters (Compensation Rights)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will take an initiative to achieve an international agreement under the auspices of the United Nations on safety and compensation rights in the event of such tragedies as the Bhopal disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Issues of safety and compensation for victims of major industrial disasters fall primarily within the competence of national legislatures and, in Europe, of the European Community. However, the UN centre of transnational corporations does work to promote safety and to minimise pollution and environmental damage; and the UN Disaster Relief Organisation has an overall co-ordinating role in respect of both natural and man-made disasters. The United Kingdom participates fully in the work of both these bodies and is currently consulting western partners with a view to putting forward proposals to enhance UNDRO's effectiveness. I see no justification for any further initiative in this field.

WPC Yvonne Fletcher

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Libya concerning the payment of compensation for the death of the late WPC Yvonne Fletcher in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to take every opportunity to remind the Libyans of our claim for compensation for the life and career of WPC Fletcher.

Daya Bay Nuclear Plant

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of recent events in the People's Republic of China, Her Majesty's Government will withdraw United Kingdom co-operation and export credit guarantees for the Daya bay nuclear plant being built in Guandong.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans to do so. Contracts for the project were signed by the companies concerned some time ago and work is proceeding. In these circumstances we do not intend to suspend ECGD cover.

Soviet Union (Emigration)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to clarify with the Soviet authorities whether those wishing to emigrate will in future require permission from relatives remaining in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have repeatedly underlined our concern at the so-called "poor relatives clause" in the existing Soviet rules covering emigration. We have pressed the Soviet authorities to ensure that no provision of this sort is included in the new emigration law, which we understand is in preparation.

Nuclear Arms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to submit proposals on the full separation of civil and military nuclear facilities and attendant verifiable safeguards to the fourth review conference of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, to be held in 1990, following the initiatives made at the third non-proliferation treaty review conference in 1985.

Mr. Waldegrave: The final document of the third review conference of the parties to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, held in 1985, recommended, inter alia, "consideration of separation of the Civil and Military facilities in the Nuclear-Weapon States".

We have no plans to submit proposals on this subject to the fourth review conference in 1990. However, the United Kingdom has made significant progress in the direction envisaged. In 1986, we brought to an end the co-processing of civil and non-civil materials at Sellafield. Inspectors of the European Atomic Energy Community have access to all civil material at Sellafield on a continuing basis.

Anglo-Egyptian Relations

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Egyptian relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our relations with Egypt are very close and friendly. The talks with the Egyptian Foreign Minister last week confirmed that our views of current middle east issues are very similar.

Nigeria and Ghana

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Nigeria or Ghana before the end of the current year; and if he will make a statement on his plans for bilateral assistance to each of the states.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State plans to visit Nigeria for the next round of United Kingdom/Nigeria bilateral talks, dates for which we hope will be agreed soon. He has no present plans to visit Ghana. I shall be visiting Nigeria from 25-27 June to lead a delegation from the Energy Industries Council for a DTI-sponsored seminar on the hydrocarbon sector in Nigeria; and I shall be visiting Ghana from 27-30 June.

In addition to our technical co-operation programme for Nigeria, we have pledged this year $100 million balance of payments assistance in support of Nigeria's structural adjustment programme. As part of our substantial programme of development assistance to Ghana, we have offered this year a further £20 million balance of payments finance, in support of Ghana's economic recovery programme.

Cyprus

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he will make to secure compensation for those British citizens whose property was expropriated in northern Cyprus in 1974.

Mr. Eggar: We do not recognise the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and have no formal dealings with its authorities. The British high commissioner in Nicosia nevertheless has informal contacts with Mr. Denktash and we are thus able to protect the interests of British nationals.

Whilst we are not aware of any instances of the outright expropriation of property by those authorities, we are continuing to press for all outstanding claims for compensation from our citizens to be dealt with expeditiously and for the remaining difficulties facing those attempting to establish their freehold title to property to be resolved.

Diplomatic Staff (Vehicles)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those British embassies whose ambassadors or consuls do not drive British manufactured motor cars as their official vehicle.

Mr. Eggar: With one exception, the official vehicles provided for heads of mission at British embassies and high commissions overseas are British-manufactured. In Addis Ababa, the ambassador has an EC-manufactured Ford Granada, which was purchased in Britain.

There are five consuls-general/consuls who drive non-British manufactured cars. These are the consulates-general at Montreal (Chrysler), Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo (Chevrolet), and the consulates at Cape Town (Vauxhall Carlton) and Durban (Ford Sierra).

It is FCO policy to purchase British manufactured cars where possible. However, for operational reasons, one head of mission and five heads of post around the world drive non-British-manufactured cars.

Chile

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to assist the transition to democracy in Chile before the elections there.

Mr. Eggar: Both we and our partners in the Twelve fully support the continuing transition process in Chile. We welcome the satisfactory progress made this year towards the restoration of a democratic system in Chile. We regularly invite to Britain leading representatives of Chilean political parties.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

67. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding the retention of battlefield and short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government share the assessment made by NATO at its recent summit that for the foreseeable future there is no alternative to the Alliance strategy of deterrence and that this strategy requires a mix of nuclear forces, including Europe-based ground-launched missiles. The Government therefore welcome the summit's rejection of a third zero.

Protection Vests

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates when personal protection vests for use by armed forces in general war were issued to armed forces in each country belonging to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available and it would involve disproportionate cost and effort to obtain it.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conveniently available figures over a recent convenient period of time he has (a) for excessive consumption of alcohol among service personnel and (b) for alcohol-related courts martial; and if he will set up an internal departmental committee to consider excessive alcohol consumption in Her Majesty's Forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Figures are not maintained for excessive consumption of alcohol among service personnel. Figures for alcohol-related convictions at courts martial for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988 are given in the table. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

	1986	1987	1988
Royal Navy/Royal Marines	[1]12	[1]10	[1]21
Army	[1]36	[1]56	[1]45
Royal Air Force	34	52	54

[1] Figures relate to convictions where the charge was directly concerned with drink and exclude cases where the charge was for another offence.

An existing tri-service committee on drug abuse prevention is the appropriate departmental committee for considering excessive alcohol consumption in the armed forces.

Royal Navy Ships (Town Links)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Royal Navy ships which have been granted honorary freedom of their affiliated towns or cities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Many Royal Navy ships have been granted honorary freedom of their affiliated towns or cities. However, no comprehensive list of such ships is held centrally and one could only be obtained at disproportionate cost and effort.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what links each of the following Royal Navy ships have, or are expected to have with towns or cities in the United Kingdom: (1) HMS Cornwall, (2) HMS Cumberland, (3) HMS Campbeltown, (4) HMS Chatham, (5) HMS Norfolk, (6) HMS Marlborough, (7) HMS Argyll, (8) HMS Lancaster, (9) HMS Vanguard, (10) HMS Victorious, (11) HMS Vengeance, (12) HMS Venerable, (13) RFA Fort Grange, (14) RFA Fort Austin, (15) RFA Resource, (16) RFA Regent, (17) HMS Trafalgar, (18) HMS Turbulent, (19) HMS Tireless, (20) HMS Torbay, (21) HMS Trenchant, (22) HMS Talent, (23) HMS Triumph, (24) HMS Swiftsure, (25) HMS Sovereign, (26) HMS Superb, (27) HMS Sceptre, (28) HMS Spartan, (29) HMS Splendid, (30) HMS Churchill, (31) HMS Courageous, (32) HMS Conqueror, (33) HMS Valiant, and (34) HMS Warspite.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ship to town/city links are as follows:

Ship	Town
HMS Cumberland	Cumbria
HMS Campbeltown	Campbeltown
HMS Chatham	Medway
HMS Trafalgar	Lancaster
HMS Turbulent	Warrington
HMS Tireless	Rugby
HMS Torbay	Torbay
HMS Trenchant	Shrewsbury
HMS Swiftsure	Southport
HMS Sovereign	Derby
HMS Superb	Stafford

Ship	Town
HMS Sceptre	Wigan
HMS Spartan	Rothesay
HMS Spendid	Plymouth
HMS Churchill	Redbridge
HMS Courageous	Preston
HMS Conqueror	Congleton
HMS Valiant	Scarborough
HMS Warspite	Hereford

Royal Fleet Auxiliaries are not affiliated to towns or cities. Most of the remaining vessels are under construction and as yet have no affiliation.

Paper Products

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spends on paper products; how much paper is consumed by his Department in an average month; what steps he plans to take to reduce the quantity of paper consumed; and if he has plans to purchase recycled paper for his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence, world wide, spends some £7·7 million per year on paper products. This equates to just under 900 tonnes consumption per month.

All demands for paper products are closely scrutinised; in particular, there is a continuing review of forms usage within the MOD which has already reduced the consumption of printed material and will continue to do so.

The MOD is already obtaining many stock ranges with a high recycled content such as envelopes, notebooks, file covers etc. More recycled products will be purchased provided that this does not affect quality, versatility and represents value for money.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports (Group of Seven)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table of the volume of exports per head of population of the Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information in both value and volume terms is in the following table.

Exports per head of population, 1988

	[1] Volume 1985 = 100	Value United States $
France	110	2,896
Federal Republic of Germany	111	5,273
Italy	110	2,247
United Kingdom	109	2,538
Canada	117	4,316
United States of America	129	1,302
Japan	103	2,160

Post Office Monopoly

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for ending the Post Office monopoly.

Mr. Forth: We keep the options under review, but we have no present plans to end the monopoly. We have, however, made it clear that the Post Office's letter monopoly is a privilege, not a right, and that in the event of a cessation or serious disruption of the letter service, we would consider suspending it.

Liquidators

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the figures for the number of certificates issued for licensed liquidators since the Insolvency Act 1986 came into operation.

Mr. Maude: There are currently 1,737 individuals authorised to act as insolvency practitioners under the Insolvency Act 1986.

Telecommunications (Liberalisation)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any decisions have been made as a result of the recommendations from the Director General of Telecommunications about the further liberalisation of telecommunication services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has received advice from the Director General of Telecommunications following a major consultation exercise which he undertook earlier this year. We are very grateful to the director general and his staff for the thorough and professional way they carried this out.

We have decided to accept the recommendations the director general has made for changes to the current regime for the provision of telecommunications services using the networks of, or circuits provided by, a fixed-link public telecommunications operator (PTO), that is British Telecommunications plc, Mercury Communications Ltd. or Kingston Communications plc.

The first, and most important, of these is that we have decided to liberalise entirely the use made by companies of private circuits domestic to the United Kingdom leased from a PTO. Until now, companies leasing circuits have not been permitted to resell capacity to others or to share it with them. This prohibition arose from the fact that the price of private circuits leased from BT was historically below cost and provided significant opportunities for the use of leased lines to bypass the public network, to the detriment of the ordinary user. For this reason, the operating licences of the PTOs prohibited until 1 July 1989 the use of leased lines to provide simple resale, that is the routing of a call from the public network, over a leased line and back on to the public network. This was intended to allow for the rebalancing of leased line and network charges.

This rebalancing has now largely taken place within the United Kingdom, and we see no need any longer to prevent companies making use of leased lines however they choose, whether for voice or data services. We therefore intend to issue a licence permitting simple resale of United Kingdom domestic private circuits as well as other forms of resale, bypass and shared use. Those networks connected to the public switched network (PSN) will continue to be subject to the rules on technical quality standards.

Although considerable tariff rebalancing has taken place on circuits within the United Kingdom, international tariffs are still out of line with costs. We have therefore decided to retain the current prohibition on international simple resale for the time being. However, we have accepted the director general's recommendation that he should keep the situation under review and advise us as and when further liberalisation is justified. The new licence will therefore be drafted in such a way as to allow us to liberalise international private circuits on a case-by-case basis as opportunities arise.

The director general has also recommended other major changes to the existing licensing regime. In the light of his experience in administering the fair trading rules in the current value-added and data services licence, he has recommended that they be simplified in operation and more clearly targeted on companies likely to abuse a dominant position. Thus, companies which the director general considers dominant, with large businesses in telecommunications services, will continue to be covered by the present rules against cross-subsidisation, showing undue preference or discrimination and other detailed conditions. However, those rules in the current regime which impose heavy cost and which may deter people because of the difficulty of compliance are to be removed. These include the rule on publication of prices which is in abeyance already. Conversely, rules which are of value to users, such as those on privacy and confidentiality, metering and numbering are to be applied to all operators, rather than just the largest.

We have also accepted the director general's advice that the new licence should include a condition aimed at alleviating the nuisance to the users of the telephone, fax or other telecommunications systems caused by persistent but unsolicited attempts to sell products and services. Sellers by telephone or fax or those acting as their agents, will be required by the new licence to stop making these direct sales calls to any particular user of a telecommunication system when he has given them a written instruction to do so.

Other changes which are to be made include provisions allowing greater flexibility for installers, maintainers and users of call-routing apparatus, the reduction of the minimum period for the termination of maintenance contracts to 42 days and the introduction of a requirement to provide inductive couplers in emergency telephones in lifts.

Although the limit of 200 m for the provision of privately provided circuits between buildings will be retained, service providers will be permitted to run these systems on others' premises and the procedure for permitting exceptions to the 200 m rule (where justified) will be simplified.

We believe these changes will add greatly to the freedom and the flexibility of telecommunications operators in the United Kingdom, and will keep the United Kingdom in the vanguard of telecommunications liberalisation both in Europe and worldwide. We intend to bring these changes about by issuing a new branch systems general licence during July. This will replace both the existing branch systems general licence and that for value-added and data services. My Department and the Office of Telecommunications are currently finalising the details of the new licence, and we shall inform the House when it is to be issued.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Numbers)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Major: On 1 April 1989, there were 569,215 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 499,821 were non-industrials and 69,394 were industrials.

Trustees

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the residence status of trustees for income tax purposes in the light of the recent decision of the House of Lords in the case of Dawson v CIR.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have considered the implications of the House of Lords' recent decision in the case of Dawson v CIR, and have decided that the present law does not deal satisfactorily with the residence status for income tax purposes of trustees in cases where the trustees of a settlement include both a United Kingdom resident and a non-resident. We therefore propose to introduce new rules to determine the residence status of such "mixed residence" trustees. Provided that the settlor was not resident, not ordinarily resident and not domiciled in the United Kingdom at the time he made the settlement (and at any later time when he provided funds), the trustees will be treated as not resident in the United Kingdom. Otherwise "mixed residence" trustees will all be treated as United Kingdom resident.

This proposal will not affect trusts where the trustees are all United Kingdom residents, or all non-resident. In those cases, the existing rules will continue to apply.

There will also be similar rules governing the residence status of personal representatives of a deceased person, where they include both a United Kingdom resident and a non-resident.

There will also be provisions, applying to all trustees and personal representatives, to make it clear that income tax assessments may be made on any one or more of them.

Further details of the proposals are set out in an Inland Revenue press release published today. The necessary provisions have been tabled for Committee stage of the Finance Bill.

Savings

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the personal savings ratio.

Mr. Lilley: We expect many of the factors which led to the fall in the personal savings ratio to reverse themselves over the medium term. In addition, the rise in interest rates over the past year will encourage higher savings and lower borrowing.

Orchids

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Her Majesty's Customs and Excise take to prevent the smuggling of rare orchids into Britain.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 9 June 1989]: Customs and Excise makes every effort to prevent the illegal import of listed orchids and other items covered by the convention on international trade in endangered species.

CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. David Morphet

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether any conditions have been attached by the advisory committee on business appointments to the employment by Balfour Beatty of Mr. David Morphet, formerly of the Department of Energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: It is not our practice to divulge information about individual applications under the business appointment rules, as to do so would be a breach of confidence and privacy.

ENERGY

AGR Fuel Rods

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many spent AGR fuel rods are expected to be produced in each year from 1989 to 2000 and if advanced gas-cooled reactors produce electricity at their planned output during the 1990s.

Mr. Michael Spicer This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the earliest date by which the proposed Heysham AGR dry storage facility could be ready; and whether it will be large enough to store all the spent AGR fuel from all of Britain's AGRs for their planned lifetimes.

Mr. Michael Spicer This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the details of safeguards inspection for civil nuclear materials and facilities agreed with the European Commission regulation 3227/76; and when such inspections began.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Euratom inspections began in 1973. It is not the custom within Euratom to publish details of the inspection arrangements for any nuclear facility in the Community.

Irradiated Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West, June, he will list the countries of origin and dates on which consignments of irradiated fuel have been returned to their countries of origin since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The country of origin of the shipments referred to in the answer to the hon. Member on 7 June is included in those listed in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 18 February 1987 at column 635. Details of individual consignments are confidential.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, (Dr. Thomas) Official Report, 8 May column 289, whether the reports on plutonium production sent by reactor operators to safeguards authorities are detailed routinely to (a) single gramme quantities, (b) tens of grammes quantities, or (c) hundreds of grammes quantities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Euratom regulation 3227/76 article 21 (a) requires quantities of special nuclear material to be expressed in grammes.

Uranimum (Namibia)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 19 May, column 314, which was the competent authority in Namibia which gave the N obligation code to the consignment of Namibian uranium imported to the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The N obligation code was assigned by the Euratom safeguards authorities.

Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will detail all his Department's policies and proposals regarding (a) acid rain and (b) pollution by nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government will ensure that the CEGB and its successor companies contribute to the emission reduction requirements of the European Communities' large combustion plant directive. These are to reduce emissions of sulphur dioxide by 60 per cent. on 1980 levels by 2003 and nitrogen oxides by 30 per cent. on 1980 levels by 1998. We shall encourage the development and application of renewable energy sources wherever they have prospects of being economically competitive and environmentally acceptable. Furthermore, the non-fossil fuel obligation which will be placed on the public electricity suppliers in the privatised electricity industry and the continuing work of the energy efficiency office will help to reduce acid rain.

Policy on radioactive waste is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Conservation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will detail his Department's specific proposals for energy conservation for each year since 1981.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Details of the Government's proposals on energy efficiency have been published annually in the public expenditure White Paper and in response to reports of the Select Committee on Energy.

Safeguards Agreement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many withdrawals from safeguards, under article 14 of the 1978 tripartite safeguards agreement between United Kingdom—Euratom—International Atomic Energy Authority, have been made since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 11 May 1989]: Some temporary withdrawals have been made for technical operational reasons with the material being returned to safeguards after it has been processed in unsafeguarded facilities. Some permanent withdrawals have also been made. It would not be in the public interest to reveal details of these.

WALES

Careers Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools careers local education authority school teachers there were in Wales in May 1980 and at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. However, information from the 1984 secondary school staffing survey indicates that in 1984 there were 473 teachers of careers education. A further staffing survey is currently under way.

Education Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has met teachers' organisations to discuss his Department's plans to test children at seven years of age; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has met teachers' organisations to discuss his Department's policy of testing pupils at the age of 14 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Welsh Office Ministers and officials have met representatives of teachers' organisations on numerous occasions and the subjects discussed have included assessment and testing of children in accordance with the Education Reform Act.

Dog Registration

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has plans for compulsory dog registration in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no plans to introduce dog registration in Wales.

Shotton and Connah's Quay Bypass

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Alyn and Deeside district council, Clwyd county council and the Deeside town and community councils to discuss how his Department might assist in the building of a Shotton and Connah's Quay bypass, including a new river crossing of the River Dee at Connah's Quay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It would not be appropriate: this is a matter for Clwyd county council as the responsible highway authority. However I am fully aware of its proposals and expect to receive a bid for transport supplementary support.

Land Development (Shotton)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Clwyd county council and Alyn and Deeside district council to discuss with them how his Department might assist those local authorities in developing land adjacent to the River Dee which was previously the site of steelmaking activity at Shotton.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. My statutory responsibilities under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 preclude me from discussing with local authorities the proposals for the development of specific sites. If proposals that emerge for the development of the site demonstrate a need for central Government financial support, my Department's officers will be available to discuss this with the local authorities.

Hill Farms

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for hill farms in marginal land areas within the less-favoured areas the (a) average size in hectares, (b) farm income, (c) number of farms, (d) number of ewes and (e) number of beef cows for the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: Figures relating to holdings in the disadvantaged areas of the less-favoured areas in respect of June 1988 are given in the following table:

	Figures
(a) Average size in hectares	41·5
(c) Number of holdings	6,082
(d) Number of breeding ewes	582,024
(e) Number of breeding beef cows	23,859

A figure for (b) farm income is not published separately for marginal area farms. However, for all LFA livestock farms net farm income in 1987-88 was £9,453.

Minibus Licensing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of proposed European Economic Community regulations on minibus licensing on voluntary organisations in Wales; and whether he will oppose the proposed regulations.

Mr. Peter Walker: The proposed EC regulation, which would require new minibus drivers to take a second driving test and to meet higher health standards, would have significant social and cost consequences for voluntary and community transport organisations which rely heavily on volunteer drivers. The Government consider there are no road safety reasons for the proposed change, and the European Commission is being pressed to avoid introducing unnecessary restrictions.

Mandatory Repairs Grant

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date Welsh local authorities were first informed of changes in the amount of mandatory repairs grant from 75 per cent. to 25 per cent. for landlords under sections 130 and 131 of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Grist: Local authorities were consulted about proposals for changes to the rate of repair grant for landlords during the course of 1987 and 1988, and were notified of the change in rate (to 20 per cent.) in advance correspondence which was issued on 10 January this year.

Sewage

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bridgend on 12 June, Official Report, columns 306-308, concerning the applications from the Welsh water authority for variations of existing discharge consents for sewage treatment works, if he will indicate for which of the works listed requests were made for the discharge standards to be (a) relaxed and (b) tightened up.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with full details of the applications as soon as possible and I will place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent by central and local government in Wales, for the last year for which figures are available, on (a) local authority services, including the police, (b) health services and (c) economic development.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Details of expenditure within my responsibility are given in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" (Cm. 617) and in the Welsh Office commentary. The last year for which firm outturn figures are available for local authorities is 1986-87. The net public expenditure figures requested are as follows:

£ million

	1986-87 outturn
Local authority expenditure in Wales[1]	2,015
National Health Services	989
Industry and Employment	178

[1] Including police and other non-Welsh Office services.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Heroin (Crop Substitution)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds he is currently providing to promote crops substitution in Pakistan to control heroin traffic: how the funds are to be administered and monitored; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have committed £3·4 million to the United Nations fund for drugs abuse control crops substitution and special rural development programme in the Dir district of the North-West Frontier province. The programme is part of the special development and enforcement plan for poppy growing areas. £2·4 million of the grants has been spent so far.

Administrative and monitoring arrangements are to be strengthened by the recruitment of a three-man technical support unit to assist provincial government officials and the UNFDAC field officer.

PRIME MINISTER

European Commission

Q15. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the European Commission.

The Prime Minister: I receive a number of such representations.

Rain Forest

Q104. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what communication she has received from the Government of Brazil concerning assistance with preservation of the tropical rain forest.

The Prime Minister: Following discussions with senior representatives of the Brazilian Government, the Secretary-General of the Brazilian Ministry of the Interior has written to my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development inviting Her Majesty's Government to agree on a programme of technical co-operation in the environmental field. A team of British professional experts has this week returned from Brazil where they discussed how we might help; my hon. Friend will take this further when he visits Brazil in July.

European Directives

Q170. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the scale and pattern of directives emerging from the Commission; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I expect the European Council to discuss a number of current Community issues. I also refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 6 June at column 129.

Engagements

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Government Publicity

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether, in the light of paragraph 13 of the guidance on conventions on Government publicity issued by the Cabinet Office, advice on the propriety of methods of releasing official information by officials will be sought from the Cabinet Office prior or subsequently to the receipt of ministerial sanction for express approval for the release of such information.

The Prime Minister: It is for Departments to decide whether and when to seek such advice in the light of paragraph 12 of the guidance.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Press Briefings

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he follows in determining which journalists are invited to press briefings by his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The journalists invited to press briefings depend upon the matter under discussion.

Medical Research

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the amount of money spent on medical research in each of the last 10 years broken down into (a) the total figure per year, (b) the percentage spent on AIDS and (c) as a percentage of the total research budget.

Mr. Jackson: The main agency through which the Government support medical research is the Medical Research Council. The following table shows, for each of the last 10 years, the grant in aid to the MRC, the amount of that spent on specific programmes of AIDS research, and the grant in aid to the MRC as a percentage of the total science budget:

	(a) Grant in aid to MRC	(b) Amount of (a) spent on specific programmes of AIDS research	(c) (b) as a percentage of (a)	(d) Science Budget	(e) (a) as a percentage of (d)
	£ million	£ million	Percentage	£ million	Percentage
1979-80	57·2	—	—	333	17·2
1980-81	86·6	—	—	396	21·9
1981-82	101·5	—	—	440	23·1
1982-83	107·5	—	—	469	22·9
1983-84	113·7	—	—	504	22·6
1984-85	117·2	0·1	0·1	535	21·9
1985-86	122·3	0·4	0·3	571	21·4
1986-87	128·3	0·7	0·5	603	21·3
1987-88	139·8	3·7	2·6	658	21·2
1988-89	149·6	5·0	3·3	709	21·1

In addition, universities and medical schools support a range of medical research, including AIDS research, from block grants provided by the Universities Funding Council (formerly the University Grants Committee). Other medical research is supported by the health authorities.

Schools (Fences)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will issue a circular to local authorities, concerning the dangers caused to pupils and teachers through inadequate fencing around primary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not necessary to issue a circular on the danger caused to pupils and teachers through inadequate fencing around primary schools. Local authorities are already aware of the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act and circular 11/74 issued by the DES following that Act.

Gateshead City Technology College

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many tenders were received for the development of the Gateshead city technology college; and what were the various tender prices submitted.

Mrs. Rumbold: Five tenders were received. Prices ranged from £6,730,000 to £7,245,000. The price offered by Laing Northern was the lowest, and its design proposals were considered to be the most appropriate of those submitted.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in the light of the contribution from public funds towards the development costs of the Gateshead city technology college (a) who will own the buildings, (b) who will own the land which constitutes the site once the project is completed and (c) to whom the assets will revert should the school fail to open or close at some future date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Tyneside city technology college trust will own the land and buildings. The funding agreement between my right hon. Friend and each individual CTC will specify the conditions under which repayment will be made to him in the event that the school should close.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date John Laing plc became a sponsor of the Gateshead city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: John Laing announced its sponsorship of the CTC in Gateshead in October 1988.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what elements of the national curriculum the Gateshead city technology college will be obliged to adopt.

Mrs. Rumbold: As a condition of grant, all CTCs will be bound to offer the full national curriculum including assessment arrangements throughout the compulsory years of education.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what investigations were made into possible inner-city sites for the Gateshead city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: Investigations were made into other sites in Tyne and Wear, but none was found to be suitable.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total contribution of the CTC Trust to the development of the Gateshead city technology college to date; for what specific purposes such money has been allocated; and what further advances are planned.

Mrs. Rumbold: The CTC Trust has not itself contributed financially to the development of the Gateshead CTC. It was, however, involved in the negotiations for the acquisition of the site.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the Gateshead city technology college roll must be drawn from the inner-city area in order for the college to comply with the aims and objectives of Her Majesty's Government's policy to develop city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: The catchment area for the Gateshead CTC is not yet finalised, but it will be drawn so as to include surrounding areas of deprivation, and every effort will be made to ensure that as high a proportion of children as possible come from those areas.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the opening and closing dates for the submission of tenders for the development of the Gateshead city technology college; and what date the tender from Laing Northern was received; and who had access to the tenders submitted prior to the closing date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The date for submission of tenders was 12 May. All tenders, including the tender from Laing Northern, were received under sealed cover on that day. They were opened, stamped, and their contents formally recorded, in the presence of five witnesses. I do not know of any person who had access to the tenders before submission. The DES, and the sponsors (other than John Laing plc), and the members of the panel had no such access.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which of the sponsors of the Gateshead city technology college were involved in the decision to award the development contract to Laing Northern.

Mrs. Rumbold: The decision upon the award of the development contract was made by an evaluation panel composed of Mr. Peter Vardy, as the principal sponsor, the chief architect of Argyll plc, the chief architect of the DES, the project director, and three independent assessors nominated by my Department. John Laing plc was not represented on the panel and had no part whatsoever in the decision.

Student Loans

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it is his intention to charge interest on student loans in cases where repayment is deferred because of low earnings after graduation.

Mr. Jackson: As was made clear in the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" (Cm. 520), the Government's proposals are for a zero real interest rate on the outstanding balance of the top-up loan; where repayments are deferred because a graduate's income is low, a real interest rate of zero will continue to apply during the period of deferment.

EMPLOYMENT

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the future of the scheme ports once the dock labour scheme is abolished; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have received a number of representations supporting the Government's proposals to abolish the dock labour scheme so that scheme ports can become more competitive and attract new investment to provide jobs in the ports themselves and in surrounding areas.

Lifting the barriers to business and jobs imposed by the scheme's damaging and unnecessary controls has been widely welcomed throughout industry.

EC Social Charter

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards those clauses of the European Community's draft social charter which would ensure the participation of the work force in decision making within companies.

Mr. Cope: The Government believe firmly that employee involvement in the United Kingdom is best developed on a voluntary basis. We shall therefore continue to oppose attempts to legislate on this subject.

SCOTLAND

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contingency plans his Department has for dealing with an accident involving (a) any seaborne, (b) any airborne or (c) any landborne nuclear weapons, in the course of non-operational activities, including courtesy calls.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave today to a similar question from the hon. Member.

Tree Planting

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer of Thursday, 25 May, Official Report, column 25, if he will place those representations on tree planting in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The representations were contained in private correspondence and it would therefore be inappropriate to place them in the Library.

Rates

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce a table for each district council showing the total yield from the rate payment for 1988-89 showing the breakdown of the amount attributed to district and region.

Mr. Lang: The estimated yields from rate payments are set out in the table.

Community Charge

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the figures given in the table in his written answer of 12 June showing the amount attributable to the district and the region.

Mr. Lang: The figures given in the table are the estimated yields, in 1989-90, of community and water charges in the district, regional and islands councils in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he is proposing to make for relieving owners of unoccupied farm cottages of their liability to pay the standard community charge.

Mr. Lang: I have today laid before Parliament a set of regulations—the Standard and Collective Community Charges (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1989—which provide that certain unoccupied and unfurnished agricultural dwellinghouses, which fulfil conditions prescribed in those regulations, will be exempt from the standard community charge and the standard community water charge.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land was approved for afforestation in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales in the 12 months ending 1 April; of this how much was for (i) coniferous and (ii) deciduous planting; how much was actually planted; and of both approved and planted totals how much was in respect of land on which set-aside payments were being made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following areas of land were approved for afforestation under Forestry Commission grant schemes in the year ended 31 March 1989:

Hectares

Country	Area of planting (including set-aside)	Area under set-aside
Scotland	16,000	120
England	2,100	40
Wales	600	nil
Total	18,700	160

Information is not held centrally on the breakdown of these areas between broadleaves and conifers.

The following were the areas of new planting on which grants were paid under Forestry Commission Grant schemes in the year ended 31 March 1989:

Area of planting

Hectares

Country	Conifers	Broadleaves
Scotland	20,900	1,550
England	750	900
Wales	700	200
Total	22,350	2,650

No planting grants were paid in respect of land on which set-aside payments are to be made.

It should be noted that (i) areas approved for planting are not necessarily planted and grant aided in the same year, and (ii) the above figures exclude land for which planting grants were approved or paid in association with the farm woodland scheme.

Language Teaching

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether Indic language teaching in Scottish schools is given equal status with European languages; and what is done to overcome any lack of availability of such classes for school children of Asian extraction who wish to learn one of the Indic languages.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 June 1989]: Guidance to education authorities on the teaching in schools of languages other than English, issued in SED circular No. 1178 of 12 January 1989, urges that Asian languages and the traditions they represent should be respected and fostered, and confirms that the inclusion of an Asian language within the curriculum from S1 or S2 is appropriate where demand exists and can be met. It is for education authorities to decide whether and when it may be appropriate to include such a language in the curriculum of any school.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eggs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the shortfall in eggs to meet domestic demand this summer; and whether he has any control over the eggs imported to meet this shortfall.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not possible to provide a precise estimate of the likely balance between the supply and demand for eggs this summer. Placings for egg layer production have fallen in recent months, in line with reductions in demand earlier this year, and this will have an effect on the supply situation. On the question of controls on imported eggs, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 20 April at column 280.

Monofilament Nets

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the depth at which monofilament nets are usually set at (a) inshore waters and (b) at sea; and if he will list the regulations and byelaws which control the siting and setting of such nets.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Monofilament nets are set at varying depths depending on the location and the species of fish sought. There are no specific national regulations governing the siting and setting of fixed nets within the fishery limits for England and Wales but their use out to six miles may be regulated by local byelaws made by water authorities and sea fisheries committees. Details of such byelaws are available from the offices of these bodies.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his fisheries inspectors routinely examine fixed monofilament nets by removing them from the water; if these inspections involved the recording and monitoring of the incidental capture of marine mammals and sea birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are currently no regulations on fixed monofilament nets and consequently no requirement for my fisheries inspectors to examine them. As regards the incidental capture of marine mammals, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 March 1989 at column 464: my Department is continuing to develop its plans for the monitoring scheme. We have no plans at present for monitoring the incidental capture of sea birds, although we are keeping the situation under review.

Slaughter and Compensation Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those notifiable diseases in animals for which a slaughter and compensation scheme operates; and if he will list those notifiable diseases in animals for which a compensation scheme does not operate.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

(a) Notifiable diseases for which a slaughter and compensation scheme operates are:
- African swine fever
- Aujeszky's disease
- Bovine spongiform encephalopathy
- Brucellosis melitensis in cattle
- Cattle plague in ruminants and swine
- Classical swine fever
- Foot and mouth disease
- Pleuro-pneumonia in cattle
- Rabies
- Swine vesicular disease
- Tuberculosis in cattle

(b) Notifiable diseases for which a slaughter and compensation scheme does not operate are:
- African horse sickness
- Anthrax
- Contagious equine metritis
- Dourine in horses, asses, mules and zebras
- Enzootic bovine leukosis
- Epizootic lymphangitis in horse, asses and mules
- Equine encephalomyelitis
- Equine infectious anaemia
- Fowl pest (fowl plague, Newcastle disease and paramyxovirus) in poultry of any kind
- Glanders and farcy in horses, asses and mules
- Paramyxovirus in pigeons
- Sheep pox
- Sheep scab
- Teschen disease of pigs
- Tuberculosis in deer
- Warble fly

Nitrates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the leaching of nitrates from land formerly used for nitrogen-fixing crops once that land has been included in the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Ryder: Such information is not yet available from set-aside scheme trials, but it will be provided by experiments currently in progress. Meanwhile, scientific evidence indicates that nitrate leaching from land converted from nitrogen fixing crops to permanent fallow could be relatively high in the first year, but it would fall subsequently.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision is made within the set-aside scheme to minimise pollution of ground water and water courses by nitrates.

Mr. Ryder: Under the rules for the management of land set aside to fallow under the scheme, a plant cover must be established and maintained on the land concerned and the use of fertilisers is not generally permitted. Furthermore, advice is available to farmers from my Department on the best practices for the avoidance of pollution by nitrates.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his top-up scheme for enhancing the environmental value of set-aside land.

Mr. Ryder: The top-up scheme, which will be known as the countryside premium for set-aside land, will be administered by the Countryside Commission with advice and assistance from the Nature Conservancy Council, the Department of the Environment and my Department. Details of the scheme are to be announced on 19 June by the chairman of the Countryside Commission.

Bovine Somatatropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether cows treated with bovine somatatropin under experiment can subsequently be sold for slaughter for human consumption; and whether his Department imposes any time limit on the period to elapse between the ending of bovine somatatropin treatment and slaughter.

Mr. Donald Thompson: When the animal test certificates for BST products were assessed, the veterinary products committee, following rigorous evaluation of all the available data, was satisfied that it would be safe to eat meat from treated cows when they were culled. Accordingly, such cows may be sold for slaughter for human consumption; no withdrawal period has been specified.

Dogs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) for what purpose information is collected on each dog imported into the United Kingdom;

(2) how many American bandogs are presently in quarantine following importation;

(3) if he will make a statement on the powers available to his Department to control the importation of dogs;

(4) if records on the importation of dogs kept by the animal health division of his Department are kept manually in written form, or on computers;

(5) what advice has been issued to members of his Department concerning American bandogs; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what information he has on the origins, purpose, characteristics and temperament of the American bandog; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what is the number of Neopolitan mastiff bitches currently in quarantine in the United Kingdom; and what information he has as to the purposes of their import;

(8) what records his Department keeps on the importation of dogs; and whether these include information as to the breed, sex, age, weight, name, colour, distinguishing marks, exporter and importer of each dog;

(9) what returns of information on the importation of dogs are submitted by the animal health division of his Department to the central statistical unit of his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974 as amended restricts the importation of dogs to licensed animals landed at prescribed ports and airports and requires them to be quarantined for six months. These powers are designed to prevent the introduction of rabies into this country and not to limit the number and breeds of dogs imported. Applicants for import licences must provide information, necessary for identification should it escape during quarantine, concerning the dog's breed, sex, age, weight, name, colour and distinguishing marks, together with details of the owner, authorised carrying agent, quarantine premises and expected date of landing. No information is required as to the purpose of the importation.

All information is retained on a confidential basis by the animal health division in the form of manual records. Summary data by breed are not kept and it is not possible to say how many Neopolitan mastiff bitches or American bandogs are presently in quarantine, as these may not have been described as such in the licence application. I understand that an American bandog is a cross between a pit bull terrier and a Neopolitan bull mastiff bull. No advice has been issued concerning this breed.

Rabies

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest information he has on the prevalence of rabies in Europe.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The WHO centre at Tuebingen, West Germany recorded 5,051 European rabies cases for the fourth quarter 1988. The total for the same quarter 1987 was 4,280 cases. A species breakdown for the fourth quarter 1988 reveals:

	Numbers
Wild animals	3,950
of which Red Fox	3,536
Domestic animals	1,100
of which
Dogs—Europe	75
Dogs—Turkey	100

Urban rabies continues to occur in Turkey, where 77 per cent. of all cases were in dogs, and 99·6 per cent. of all cases occurred in domestic animals. One human case occurred, in Blackburn, England. The disease had been contracted in Pakistan. There are undoubtedly cases of human rabies in Turkey but there is no regular reporting of these cases to the rabies centre. In several countries, a substantial rise in cases has been reported. Although a single quarter's figures must not be taken out of context, it is clear that the progress being made in the control of wildlife rabies in western Europe will be slow.

The yearly total shows a reduction of 3·7 per cent. In West Germany, which has previously recorded dramatic falls in the number of cases, the number recorded was 31 more than in the fourth quarter 1987. A substantial increase in cases (490—53 per cent. of the country's total) occurred in the Bundesland Hessen. All the other Bundeslander registered slight rises or remained stable. However, the total for 1988 in West Germany was 2,628, compared with 791 in 1987. It seems that areas where the oral vaccination of foxes has only been used once are the most vulnerable. Clearly, this form of control has to be repeated regularly. Although expensive, this appears to be a successful method of limiting the number of cases. It is not, however, a procedure which will, without other supporting mechanisms, lead to the eradication of rabies from Europe.

In Belgium, the number of cases continues to increase, taking the year's total to 515 cases; however, in the areas where oral vaccination of foxes has been carried out, the number of cases has reduced by 49 per cent.

In France, there has been no extension of the "rabies front" westwards. A total of 2,223 known cases was recorded in 1988, 155 more than in 1987. Most of the cases are found in the fox.

Italy has recorded 19 cases in the area bordering Yugoslavia. Much surveillance of wild and domestic animal carcases has been carried out, and some foxes were found positive in one Alpine region. Oral vaccination of foxes is planned in the spring, using the Tuebingen vaccine, in conjunction with Yugoslavia and Austria. Vaccination of dogs and grazing animals is also compulsory.

Switzerland recorded only 16 cases, and none were recorded from Ireland, Portugal, Denmark, Greece, Norway and Spain.

Bats found positive to rabies-related virus were recorded in the Netherlands (5) and West Germany (1). The total number of cases in Europe in 1988 was 53, compared to 140 in 1987. Denmark and Spain (affected in 1987) had no new cases. There continues to be no evidence of bat-related rabies virus in terrestrial mammals in Europe. During the quarter, 25 bats were examined in Great Britain, and all were found to be negative.

Confusion Marks

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the annual administration costs, for each of the last five years of operation of the beef variable premium scheme and of maintaining the register of confusion marks; and how many animals were so registered in each of these years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The beef variable premium scheme was administered on behalf of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce by the Meat and Livestock Commission in Great Britain and by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in Northern Ireland. Their costs over the last five years are estimated to have been as follows:

£ million

	[1]MLC	DANI
1984-85	3·8	0·6
1985-86	4·0	0·7
1986-87	4·1	0·7
1987-88	4·4	0·8
1988-89	4·4	0·8

[1]BVPS duties were usually carried out by MLC officers concurrently with their responsibilities under the sheep variable premium scheme. BVPS costs are therefore calculated as a proportion of the total cost of administering both schemes based on the number of presentations under each.

These figures include the costs of administering the confusion mark procedures. These were operated on a local basis and the costs of administration and numbers of animals were not centrally recorded.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contingency plans his Department has for dealing with an accident involving (a) any seaborne, (b) any airborne or (c) any landborne nuclear weapon, in the course of non-operational activities, including courtesy calls.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Contingency plans throughout the United Kingdom for accidents involving nuclear weapons are a matter for the Secretary of State for Defence. In the event of any such incident affecting Northern Ireland these would be complemented by local contingency plans.

School Buses (Accidents)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the incidence by area or district of road traffic accidents involving children disembarking from school buses, indicating the number of such fatalities in the past five years.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Information is not available in the exact form requested. Existing records do not differentiate between types of bus operators and the following information includes buses operated by education and library boards, public service vehicles used solely for transporting children to and from school and buses used by the general public. Details of children, that is, persons under 15 years of age, killed immediately after alighting from buses are as follows:

Location	Year	Number of fatalities
1 Armagh	1984	3
1 Lisburn
1 Bellaghy
1 Greyabbey	1985	1
1 Loup	1986	2
1 Ballymoney
1 Castledawson	1987	1
1 Coleraine	1988	1

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigrants

5. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the policy of his Department in treating as illegal immigrants entrants who have been given leave to enter the United Kingdom and who are alleged to have withheld information from an entry certificate officer or immigration officer.

Mr. Renton: A person who deliberately withholds evidence and thereby gains entry to which he would not otherwise be entitled may be treated as an illegal entrant under the Immigration Act 1971 and removed from the country. It is clearly right that people coming to this country should not benefit from deceiving the entry clearance officer or the immigration officer. All such cases are fully and carefully considered before removal is authorised.

Racial Harassment

9. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has been able to make an assessment of the anti-racial harassment campaign launched by the Metropolitan police at the beginning of the current year and its effect on public opinion and public reaction.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for the commissioner, not the Home Office, to make his assessment of the Metropolitan police campaign, I understand that the commissioner intends that the campaign will be evaluated. The Metropolitan police are determined to meet the needs of the community in this sensitive area, and the campaign is playing a central part in their strategy.

Neighbourhood Watch

10. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are known to his Department; and what was the equivalent number five years ago.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of March 1989 there were 66,423 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales, covering approximately 3·25 million households. This compares with 3,669 schemes in January 1985—an increase of 62,754, or 1,710 per cent. over the period.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

11. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the working of the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Mr. Hurd: During the 12 months ending 31 March 1989 a total of 184 people were detained in Great Britain under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1984 and 1989. A total of 173 of these detentions were in connection with Northern Irish terrorism and 11 were in connection with international terrorism. Twenty seven of those people were charged. During the same period, 17 people were made subject to new exclusion orders.

Jersey (Housing)

13. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning housing in Jersey.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the last year we have had representations about three such cases.

Burglary (Humberside)

14. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to reduce burglary in Humberside.

Mr. John Patten: The Government believe that a high proportion of burglaries are preventable. That is why we have encouraged neighbourhood watch schemes which can do so much to help prevent crime. Five years ago there were no watch schemes in Humberside. There are now over 1,300 such schemes in Humberside, covering some 30,000 households. At the end of April 1989 burglaries from dwellings in Humberside had fallen by 21 per cent. compared to two years ago. Detection of burglaries has increased by 28 per cent. over 1988 figures. Hull has agreed to participate in the Home Office safer cities programme and a project is being set up in the city this year. Its aims are to reduce crime, lessen the fear of crime, and create a safer city within which economic enterprise and community life can flourish.

Prohibited Drugs

16. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on his plans to ensure that prohibited drugs are not imported into the United Kingdom after 1992.

Mr. Hurd: In our discussions with other member states of the European Community, we are maintaining the position that, given our island geography, frontier checks are, and will continue to be, an indispensible part of the protection for our citizens against the evil of drug trafficking. Sir Leon Brittan confirmed in a speech to the Association of Chief Police Officers' drugs conference on 20 April that the control of drugs trafficking involves, among other things, the ability to conduct checks.

Electoral Registration

17. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to produce new publicity material to encourage people to register to vote, in the light of the recent Office of Population Censuses and Surveys reports on electoral registration.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall, as in previous years, support electoral registration officers in their statutory task with a nationwide advertising campaign during the autumn. We also plan to issue guidance to electoral registration officers on the need for a co-ordinated local publicity strategy.

Community Trusts

19. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has had discussions with the chief charity commissioner regarding the future development of community trusts.

Mr. John Patten: No, but I know that the charity commissioners played an essential part, with my Department, in promoting the community trust movement in this country by, among other things, advising on the development of model trust instruments.

Vagrancy

20. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to collect more frequent statistics about the numbers of young people charged under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act 1824.

Mr. John Patten: Information is currently collected on all young people proceeded against or cautioned for offences under this Act and summary statistics are published annually.

Time Zones (Harmonisation)

21. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received to his consultation document on harmonisation of time zones in Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government plan to publish a Green Paper in the next few weeks. Harmonisation with the central European time zone is one of three options presented for discussion on future summer time arrangements.

Mentally Disordered Prisoners

22. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the number of mentally disordered offenders in the prison population.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The guidance in "The Sentence of the Court" is now being revised to encourage courts to avoid sending mentally disturbed people to prison if at all possible, for example by using their powers to remand to hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983, or make attendance at or admission to hospital a condition of bail. We are also preparing a circular to the police and courts on provision for mentally disturbed offenders.

Football Matches (Policing)

23. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has of the total cost of policing football matches in England and Wales in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no central record of the costs of policing football matches. This information could be obtained only at dispropotionate cost, but substantial resources are involved. Typically 5,000 officers are deployed, at a total cost of perhaps £200,000 to £300,000, each football Saturday.

China

26. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet the Minister of Justice of the People's Republic of China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs informed the House on 6 June, all scheduled ministerial visits have been suspended.

Street Robbery

27. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to combat street robbery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The police give high priority to dealing with street robbery. We are concentrating resources on certain urban high-crime areas through our safer cities programme, and we have produced a crime prevention handbook which contains advice on how members of the public can reduce the risk of being attacked; nearly 2·5 million copies of it have been distributed.

Processions

28. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests he has received in the past 12 months to make orders under section 13 of the Public Order Act 1986, to prohibit processions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We have received four such applications during that time.

Broadcasting Reform

29. Mr. Macleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the proposals contained in his White Paper, Cm 517 to institute a regionally based privatised transmission system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We received over 3,000 responses to the broadcasting White Paper, a number of which touched on our proposals to privatise the transmission system. We published on 8 June the report commissioned from Price Waterhouse to identify options for privatisation, and we are considering its conclusions in consultation with interested parties.

French Interior Minister

30. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent talks with the French Interior Minister, M. Joxe.

35. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent talks with the French Interior Minister, M. Joxe.

Mr. Hurd: M. Joxe and I met on 19 May and had wide-ranging and fruitful discussions on matters of common concern, including immigration policy, action against terrorism, drug trafficking and organised crime, and the measures required to maintain the necessary controls in these areas after 1992. We also signed an arrangement providing for further practical co-operation between the United Kingdom and France on all these matters.

Firearms Committee

31. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to appoint a chairman of the consultative committee on firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 25 May at columns 637-38.

Special Constables (Harbours)

32. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for matters within his responsibility of the use of section 47 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 to appoint special constables.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This provision has operated without major difficulty at many ports for many years. However, I am aware of the concern expressed by my hon. Friend, some other hon. Members and the Police Federation following the recent use of this provision by a statutory harbour authority. My right hon. Friend has brought this matter to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport who has primary responsibility for the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847. We shall jointly be examining the representations which have been made.

Broadcasting (Ownership)

33. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to promote diversity of ownership in television and radio broadcasting.

38. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he proposes to ensure diversity of ownership in British television and radio.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 19 May at column 317.

Juvenile Crime (Parental Responsibility)

34. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to encourage greater parental responsibility for the prevention of juvenile crime; and if he will make a statement.

50. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to encourage greater parental responsibility for the prevention of juvenile crime; and if he will make a statement.

56. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to make parents of children under 16 years of age responsible for the crimes committed by those children.

Mr. Patten: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) and for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 11 May at column 981.

Prisons (Crown Immunity)

36. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to abolish Crown immunity for prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to remove Crown immunity from penal establishments. I am satisfied that the present arrangements are effective in setting and monitoring standards required by the relevant legislation.

Police Cells

37. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in police cells at the most recent available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 215 on 14 June, of which 182 were held in the north of the country as a consequence of the recent loss of accommodation at Risley remand centre.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what action the Metropolitan police are taking in enforcement of bus lanes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The enforcement of bus lanes is undertaken by the Metropolitan police as one of the many and varied demands made on police time by the enforcement of traffic law.

European Police (Co-operation)

40. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making in fostering greater co-operation between British police forces and their counterparts elsewhere in Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Dover (Mr. Shaw) and for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 2 February 1989 at column 384.

Durham Prison (Transfers)

41. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners at Durham prison were awaiting transfer to Thorp Arch prison at the end of the last four months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is available only in respect of 31 May, when 42 prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Durham were awaiting transfer to Her Majesty's prison Thorp Arch.

Car Crime

42. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking against car crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are examining, in consultation with other Departments, the car manufacturing industry and other agencies, how best the recommendations of the 1988 Home Office standing conference on crime prevention working group on car crime might be taken forward. We are considering research into the correlation between car theft and road accidents, a car crime prevention video for use in schools, and the inclusion of assessments of car security features in published road tests. Publicity on the prevention of car crime will continue at a high level.

Illegal Drugs

43. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he makes of the changes in volume and types of illegal drugs in Britain.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government attach high priority to tackling drug misuse in all its aspects and have developed a comprehensive strategy for that purpose, which is overseen by the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs. The group, which I chair, receives regular assessments of the drug misuse situation as it affects the United Kingdom, based on information from a number of sources.

Prison Building

44. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's prison building and refurbishment programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson).

Drug Abuse

45. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made in the campaign against drug abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Goernment's strategy is to tackle drug misuse by a number of measures aimed at reducing both the supply of and the demand for drugs.

In furtherance of the strategy, we are working through the United Nations, the Council of Europe's Pompidou group and bilaterally to strengthen international co-operation against drug trafficking. We have given the police and Customs services substantial new resources to enable them to seize increased amounts of drugs. We have passed the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986, under which some £11 million of drug traffickers' assets has been ordered to be confiscated. Prevention, publicity and education are being stepped up, while funds for the expansion of drug misuse treatment and rehabilitation services have been increased to some £17·5 million in 1989-90.

European Ministers of Justice

46. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the meeting of European Ministers of Justice in San Sebastian, Spain on 26 and 27 May.

Mr. John Patten: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting, which discussed a range of topics of concern to European Community Ministers of Justice. I stressed the need for stronger co-operation to confiscate the assets of drug traffickers and other major criminals. I urged that the arrangements to enforce the payment of maintenance to women whose husbands moved to another Community country were not effective and should be made to work in practice. Similarly, on measures to prevent the abduction of children from one country to another, I stressed the need for practical action to help individual citizens.

Sunday Trading

47. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his present proposals for reform of the Sunday trading laws.

Mr. Renton: The Government are continuing to meet interested parties to try to devise reforms which are both workable and likely to command parliamentary majority. As yet, there is insufficient agreement to support early legislation in this area.

Fire Service (Wage Negotiations)

48. Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding wage negotiations for fire service employees.

Mr. John Patten: Fire service pay is determined by an agreement of the national joint council for local authorities' fire brigades, under which the rate of pay of qualified firefighters is adjusted in November each year to a level which equates to that for the upper quartile of male manual workers, calculated by reference to the Department of Employment's new earnings survey.

We have received a number of representations from hon. and right hon. Members and from members of the public on conditions of service issues in the fire service. We have explained that my right hon. and noble Friend Earl Ferrers, the Minister of State, has recently had a series of meetings with the member organisations of the national joint council with a view to establishing a working party to address a number of conditions of service-related issues raised by the Audit Commission and to consider whether the current pay formula represents the best way forward for the future.

Crime Prevention

49. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to promote effective crime prevention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The contribution that the public can make towards reducing crime is the theme of a three-year publicity campaign which we started in March 1988; the associated crime prevention handbook, which contains a great deal of practical advice, is now in its second edition and nearly 2·5 million copies of it have been distributed. In May 1988 an independent crime prevention organisation, Crime Concern, was launched with financial support from the Home Office, with the objective of stimulating and developing local crime prevention activity. The development of crime prevention in the inner city is being taken forward through the safer cities programme which was launched in March 1988.

Broadcasting Authorities

51. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet representatives of the British Broadcasting Corporation and the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend is in regular touch with the chairmen of the BBC and the IBA on a wide range of broadcasting matters.

Burglary (Suffolk)

52. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to reduce burglary in central Suffolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Neighbourhood watch continues to grow in Suffolk and there are now more than 200 schemes covering over 10,000 households. There are crime prevention panels in Ipswich, Stowmarket and Needham Market and the Mid Suffolk police liaison committee is active in spreading the crime prevention message to the rural community. In the first three months of this year burglary figures were nearly 9 per cent. lower than in the corresponding period for 1988.

Litter

53. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what impact police anti-litter campaigns are having upon crime prevention.

Mr. John Patten: The police deal with litter offences in their routine enforcement of the law. I am not aware of any particular impact which this enforcement has on crime prevention.

Metropolitan Police (Supervisions)

54. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving Metropolitan police officers have been suspended from duty following allegations of improper conduct in each of the past three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of officers suspended from duty pending investigation of alleged misconduct is as follows:

	Number
1986	73
1987	95
1988	74

Drinking and Disorder

55. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to meet representatives of the drinks and fast food industries to discuss problems arising from drinking and disorder.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House in his capacity as chairman of the ministerial group on alcohol misuse, has invited representatives of the drinks, fast food and leisure industries and the licensed trade to discuss these matters. A meeting should take place later this month or early next. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I will also be present.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

57. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to safeguard the mentally ill remanded in custody.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prison medical officers in examining inmates on reception identify as a priority those who, by reason of their mental state, may require particular attention whether of a medical or general management nature. In such cases, referral to a psychiatrist would be an early course of further action.

The police and prison services are working closely together to ensure similar early identification, and correct follow-up action can be taken in the case of a defendant who, because of overcrowding in local prisons and remand centres, is initially held in a police cell, where this cannot be avoided.

Private Security Industry

58. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to consider the accountability and regulation of the private security industry.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to questions from the hon. Members for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) and Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 15 December 1988 at column 716.

Cruel Tethering

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females have been (i) charged and (ii) convicted under section 1 of the Protection Against Cruel Tethering Act 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Section 1 of the Protection against Cruel Tethering Act 1988 amended the Protection of Animals Act 1911. It is not possible from the information held centrally to isolate such offences from others under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Greater Manchester Police

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received a copy of the chief constable's annual report on the policing of Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received the report; I am glad to see that there was a decrease of nearly 8 per cent. in the total number of crimes recorded during the year in his force area.

Surplus Prison Property

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about alternative uses for surplus prison property on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only representations received have been from my hon. Friend on behalf of the Isle of Wight Youth Trust. Of the 19 surplus prison quarters on the Isle of Wight, 10 are to be demolished—mainly on grounds of prison security—and nine sold.

Hillsborough Inquiry

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department what arrangements are being made to finance the cost of Lord Justice Taylor's inquiry into the Hillsborough stadium disaster.

Mr. Hurd: Parliamentary approval of the expenditure on this inquiry will be sought in a revised Estimate for the Home Office vote for "administration etc." (class XI, vote 3). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £100,000 is being met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

Civil Disasters

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department what conclusions he has reached following his Department's review of arrangements for handling major civil disasters in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: Our emergency services have shown repeatedly how effectively they respond to widely differing disasters, but a number of suggestions have been made as to ways in which central Government could provide better support for those with operational responsibilities.

The whole field of emergency response has therefore been reviewed. Consultations have involved the emergency services, local authorities, professional emergency planners, voluntary bodies and interested individuals, as well as other Government departments. A senior level seminar for those with operational responsibilities was held at the civil defence college, Easingwold, last November.

Our main conclusions are:

(a) prime responsibility for handling particular disasters should remain at the local level. It would not be helped by anything in the nature of a 'national disaster squad';

(b) we need improved arrangements to give national oversight to the development of co-ordinated emergency planning, and to address specific practical issues raised by recent disasters;

(c) more needs to be done to encourage and develop co-ordination of the various services at the local level.

To help meet these objectives I shall be appointing a civil emergencies adviser, charged with oversight of the whole subject and reporting directly to me. I shall announce a name as soon as I can.

The adviser will consider matters of current concern in the field of civil emergency planning in peacetime, with a view to helping those with operational responsibilities to achieve the highest standards of co-ordination and compatibility between their contingency arrangements. He will not have an operational role during an emergency, but will be closely concerned with general questions of planning and training and with drawing out the broad lessons to be learnt from particular incidents. To achieve this he will work closely with senior officers of the emergency services, local authorities, voluntary bodies, safety inspectorates, Government Departments and others directly concerned. He will be supported by a small civil emergencies secretariat within the Home Office, working in association with the Cabinet Office. The secretariat will begin preliminary work immediately.

A number of specific issues have been identified in the course of the review which I shall want the adviser to take forward as a matter of priority. These include the handling of casualty inquiries, psychological damage to survivors and relatives, assistance for foreign disasters, training and exercises. He may wish to draw on the work of existing groups which are already looking at some of the issues, or to convene interdisciplinary expert groups to address detailed questions.

To support the adviser's work I am giving the civil defence college at Easingwold a wider remit and will expect it also to address questions of peacetime emergency planning irrespective of any wartime connections. This will be reflected in a change of name to "emergency planning college".

In the course of the review local authorities argued strongly for a duty to be imposed on them to plan for peacetime emergencies. I have noted their views, but I am not at present convinced of the need for legislation. Much can be done without it. I will, however, keep the position under review as work progresses.

The arrangements I have set out here do not alter the relationships or responsibilities of central Government Departments. The Department with the closest involvement acts as "lead department" co-ordinating the central Government response, organising the necessary executive action and keeping Parliament and the public informed. The lead department is supported by arrangements for collective discussion should that prove necessary. The new arrangements are complementary to existing arrangements and will provide as a new element, a central focus for the shared views and experience of the emergency services, local authorities and voluntary bodies.

I am placing in the Libraries of both Houses a more comprehensive statement about the conduct and outcome of the review.

Bail

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if magistrates will be able to impose the condition of participation in electronic surveillance schemes without the defendant's consent;

(2) if the consent of the defendant will be required before a condition of bail is imposed by a magistrates' court in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The defendant's consent to a condition of bail is not required under the Bail Act 1976, and the Government have no plans to alter the Act in this respect. The trials of electronic monitoring will, however, proceed on the basis that in each case the willingness of the defendant to participate in the scheme will be established before the equipment is installed.

Fire Authorities (Grants)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details for each fire authority of the amounts of grant aid paid towards (a) salary costs, (b) training costs and (c) other costs in respect of each brigade emergency planning staff officer in 1986-87.

Mr. John Patten: The amounts of grant aid paid in respect of each brigade emergency planning staff officer for 1986-87 are given in the table. Training costs are not separately identified in records of grant paid.

Civil Defence College, Easingwold

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of proposed expenditure in 1989-90, 1990-91 and future years on (a) the construction of a new lecture theatre at the civil defence college, Easingwold and (b) the refurbishment and upgrading of the bedroom annexes at the civil defence college, Easingwold; and if he will make a statement upon the future programme at the civil defence college.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
New Lecture Theatre	285	471	452
Bedroom Annex	105	75	NIL

Construction and refurbishment programmes at the college are planned on the basis of need and the availability of funding.

District Authorities (Civil Defence Grants)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amounts of Home Office civil defence grant aid paid to each of the district authorities employing emergency planning staff funded by such grant for each year from 1979-80 to the present.

Mr. John Patten: Civil defence grant in respect of expenditure incurred by district authorities is normally claimed on their behalf by the relevant county or fire and civil defence authority. No records are held of the amounts in respect of individual districts.

Regional Fire Advisers

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make arrangements to place in the Library of the House the minutes of, and any papers relating to, regional fire advisers meetings since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: No. It is not normal practice for the papers relating to such meetings to be placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Midland Main Line

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has the report commissioned by midlands local authorities to consider the electrification of the midland main line; what representations he has received from Leicestershire's Conservative county councillors about its recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have not seen the report commissioned by a group of local authorities into the midland main line, though I receive representations about the line from time to time. Services and journey times along the line have recently been substantially improved, and BR plans to improve them further when rolling stock becomes available from the east coast main line, following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 12 June of additional rolling stock. It is for British Rail to propose electrification schemes where it believes that they would be worthwhile. The midland main line is not presently due for reinvestment.

Taxis

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 10 April Official Report, column 409, whether he now has plans to bring forward legislation to abolish the power of local authorities to restrict the number of taxis which might be operated in their area.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall) on 11 May at column 488.

Marine Radio Navigation

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the future of marine radio navigation in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Channon: I am today publishing a consultative document entitled "The Future of Marine Radionavigation in United Kingdom Waters" which seeks the views of the marine community about decisions needed on the land-based system of radio navigation to be provided in United Kingdom waters into the next century. In essence the choice appears to be between continuing with the present Decca navigator system, which is operated by Racal Decca Marine Navigation Ltd. under contract to the general lighthouse authorities, or adopting a system known as Loran C as part of an international co-operative venture. The consultative document sets out the considerations to be weighed and reaches a provisional view favouring participation in the Loran C project. I have, however, not yet reached a firm conclusion and I am inviting views from all interested parties. These should be sent to the Department of Transport not later than 11 September. I expect to take a decision later this year taking account of the responses received and the position reached on the current international discussions on the Loran C option. If my decision were to be in favour of the Loran C system, this would be contingent on a formal memorandum of understanding being concluded between the participating countries.

Copies of the consultative document have been placed in the Library.

London Underground (Exit Gates)

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether London Underground Limited has reported to him on progress with work on the Underground ticketing system to ensure that exit gates open automatically in the event of a single phase power failure.

Mr. Portillo: London Underground informs me that the work has been completed some two weeks ahead of schedule and assures me that all the gates will now spring open automatically if there is a power failure of any sort.

A16 (Improvement)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress being made with the A16 Spalding to Sutterton road improvement scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We intend to publish draft orders for the A16 Spalding to Sutterton improvement this summer. We had hoped to do so earlier.

London Underground (Automatic Barriers)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, further to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 112, about the cost of installing automatic ticket barriers at London Underground stations, he will indicate (i) the revised costs when the full cost of the computer is included, and (ii) what proportion of the cost of computers could be attributed to the purpose of running the automatic ticket gates.

Mr. Portillo: Information in the form requested is not held in the Department. May I suggest that the hon. Member writes to the chairman of London Underground.

Lichfield—Redditch Cross-city Line

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire of 7 June, if he will investigate the reasons why he has not yet received British Rail's submission for the electrification of the cross-city line from Lichfield to Redditch via Birmingham New Street; if he will publish in the Official Report copies of relevant correspondence between his Department and British Rail; and if he will now make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The position is described in my replies of 6 June to the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) which included a summary of discussions between British Rail and the Department. Since these meetings, I understand that British Rail carried out further work on engineering and financial matters. I expect a formal submission shortly.

Buses (Exit Mechanisms)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what commitment, including provision of finance, Her Majesty's Government have received from London Regional Transport of the extension of its safe centre exit door mechanisms to all buses; what is his estimate of the date when this is likely to be achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have not received such a proposal from London Regional Transport or London Buses Ltd. However, I understand that London Buses is currently testing a safety mechanism which automatically reopens bus doors if they come into contact with an obstruction when closing.

Safety is the Department's and LRT's highest priority. The Department has recently issued for comment draft regulations which include provisions to reduce the risk of people being trapped in power-operated bus doors. The consultation period ended on 31 May and responses are now being considered.

London Underground (Disabled People)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make representations to the chairman of London Regional Transport to change its policy so that prior permission is not required for individuals confined to a wheelchair to use London Underground provided they are accompanied by an able-bodied person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Existing regulations are for the protection and convenience of disabled passengers. I understand that passengers in wheelchairs may use the surface and sub-surface Underground lines and need only advise staff at their local station of their wish to travel. Prior notice is necessary so that staff can ensure that there are no local difficulties preventing easy wheelchair access, and can give assistance if required.

Buses (Concessionary Fares)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton of 26 April about concessionary fares on buses, stating that it is for local authorities to decide whether to make any changes in their present arrangements, represents a change from the pledges made by Her Majesty's Government during the passage of the London Regional Transport Act assuring the continuance of the free fares system for pensioners in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There has been no change in the Government's stance on concessionary fares for elderly, disabled and blind Londoners. The present concessionary scheme in London is voluntarily agreed between the London boroughs. It is primarily a local authority decision as to what concessions are provided; that is no change from the position prior to the passage of the London Regional Transport Act 1984. However, this is underpinned in law by a reserve scheme which guarantees free travel should the boroughs fail to agree voluntarily upon a uniform Londonwide scheme.

London Underground (Rolling Stock)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the railway inspectorate has examined any proposal for new Underground rolling stock submitted to them by London Underground Ltd. which would provide for (a) fewer seats or (b) more people to stand, than the current carriages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The railway inspectorate is currently considering London Underground Ltd's specification for replacing rolling stock on the Central line. This shows slightly fewer seats per train than existing stock and more space for standing passengers. The capacity of the replacement stock is not directly a matter for the inspectorate, which is principally concerned with its safety of operation.

London Transport (Passenger Attacks)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reported attacks there have been on passengers on London transport (a) buses and (b) Underground trains in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: Assaults on passengers on buses in London are dealt with by the Metropolitan police. London Regional Transport does not maintain a central statistical record of such assaults. The numbers of recorded assaults on passengers on London Underground in each of the four years were:

Year	Numbers
1985	467
1986	646
1987	635
1988	777

Passenger assaults in the first quarter of 1989 were 185 which represented an 11 per cent. reduction on the figure of 207 for the same period last year. A figure for 1984 is not available.

South London Assessment Study

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the consultant's reports on the south London assessment study; if he will outline the action that will be followed by his Department after these reports have been considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultant's report is expected late this summer. The results of the study will be published. There will be a period for public comment and discussion before decisions are taken. Subsequent action will depend on the measures adopted.

Exeter (Northern Bypass)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the proposal to construct a northern bypass for Exeter from the M5 originated in a proposal put to his Department by Devon county council as the highway authority;

(2) whether the proposal to construct a northern bypass for Exeter from the M5 is a scheme originating in his Department, without consulation with, or the approval of Devon county council.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1989, c. 338]: When the routes for the M5 were originally investigated the choice lay between a route to the east and south and one to the north and west of Exeter. This was before the advent of public consultation and the then local authorities would have been consulted in confidence. I am sorry if my previous reply was not as full as my hon. Friend would have liked.

M20

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now state when he intends to let the contract for the Charing Heath to Ashford section of the M20 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 14 June.

Birmingham Relief Road

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long, following his recent announcement that the proposed Birmingham relief road will now be subject to a competition for the private sector to finance, design, build and operate, he envisages this process will take; when he expects to publish the report of the inspector to the public inquiries; how much money has already been spent on compensation for the previously announced preferred route; and how many claims for compensation relating to the previously preferred route are currently under negotiation.

Mr. Portillo: The Government want to see the road constructed as quickly as possible, and will announce a timetable for the competition as soon as possible. A decision on the inspector's report will be announced when the competition has taken place.

The compensation provisions do not come into force until the statutory orders for the scheme have been made. The Department has bought a number of properties under planning blight, costing approximately £2·3 million. A further nine cases are currently being processed.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his Department's estimate of the cost to date of the work carried out by Sir Owen Williams and Partners and the estimated cost of any further contractual commitments with Sir Owen Williams and Partners relating to the previously preferred route for the Birmingham relief road.

Mr. Portillo: A number of specialist firms and consultants have been employed in the preparation of the Birmingham northern relief road. The total cost so far is about £10 million. The work done is not abortive; the information gathered will be made available to the private sector. The future role of Sir Owen Williams and Partners is still under discussion.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will consider claims for compensation towards the legal costs of individuals, companies and local authorities represented at the public inquiry relating to the previously preferred route for the Birmingham relief road.

Mr. Portillo: Claims for compensation towards the legal costs of individuals, companies and local authorities represented at the public inquiry for the Birmingham northern relief road will be dealt with in accordance with the normal practice once a decision on the scheme has been announced.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's estimated costs to date for the previously preferred route for the Birmingham relief road; what are his Department's estimated costs to date of the various public inquiries relating to the previously preferred route; and if he will estimate his Department's costs in implementing the competition for the road.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers already given on costs. The Department is unable to disaggregate its own internal running costs to individual schemes. We are not able to give details of the indirect costs of public inquiries, such as departmental staff costs. The direct costs, such as accommodation were about £39,000.

It is too early to estimate what the costs of implementing the competition will be. Much will depend on how many bids are received and the nature of those bids.

Minibus Drivers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), on 15 May, Official Report, columns 10-11, what progress he has made towards securing the withdrawal of the draft European Community proposals relating to licensing of minibus drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 12 June at column 331.

Blackburn Southern Bypass

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes have been made in the route of the Blackburn southern bypass of the M65 since the proposal in 1977.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1977 there have been changes in the route of the bypass at Brindle and Guide and a shift in alignment at Knuzden Brook. Last year we announced that the bypass would be extended westwards to link to the A585 and to Bamber Bridge bypass.

Emergency Routes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement in respect of his emergency transport plan "Main Road Route System", and the various major roads in England and Wales designated with military code names Hen, Mole, Moth, Newt, Pig, Tiger, Vole, Worm and Yak.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.
No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any plans exist in the Hong Kong Administration for enacting a Bill of Rights and incorporating the international covenant on civil and political rights into domestic law during the transitional period to 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The international covenant on civil and political rights was extended to Hong Kong, with certain reservations, in 1976. It is at present implemented in Hong Kong, as in the United Kingdom, through a combination of common law, legislation and administrative rules. We are now considering with the Hong Kong Government as a matter of priority whether to enact a human rights ordinance, and if so, what form it should take.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what exceptions to aspects of the joint declaration have been excluded from the proposed second draft of the proposed Basic Law for Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The latest draft of the Basic Law repeats many provisions of the joint declaration word for word. However, there are undoubtedly other areas where improvements would be welcome in Hong Kong. Consultation on the draft Basic Law has been temporarily suspended in Hong Kong. When consultation resumes, Hong Kong people will no doubt wish to continue to express their views.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests were received from the People's Republic of China seeking a postponement of direct elections to the Legislative Council in Hong Kong; what information he has as to the view of the People's Republic of China authorities as to the implementation of reforms to the political system in Hong Kong prior to the promulgation of the Basic Law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Chinese Government made clear their view that any changes introduced in Hong Kong Government's 1988 White Paper on the development of representative government should be compatible with the Basic Law to be promulgated in 1990.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific measures have been taken to ensure that the high degree of autonomy promised for the special administrative region by the People's Republic of China authorities will be effected; what sanctions exist should that autonomy not be granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A high degree of autonomy for Hong Kong is provided for in the Sino-British joint declaration of 1984, an international agreement binding under international law. We have the right to satisfy ourselves that the Basic Law fully and faithfully reflects the provisions of the joint declaration. We intend to live up to our commitments under the joint declaration and we look to the Chinese to do the same.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the power of independent and final adjudication of the Basic Law of the special administrative region of Hong Kong will vest in the territory's courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Sino-British joint declaration on the future of Hong Kong provides that the courts of the future special administrative region shall exercise judicial power independently and free from any interference, and that the power of final judgment shall be vested in the court of final appeal in Hong Kong. These provisions are reflected in articles 81 and 84 of the latest draft of the Basic Law.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of recent events in the People's Republic of China, he will consider ordering direct elections for the Legislative Council of Hong Kong; if a fully and directly elected legislature will be achieved prior to 1 July 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In the light of recent events in China, and evidence of a change of opinion in Hong Kong, we and the Hong Kong Government are taking a careful look at the programme for advancing and consolidating effective democracy in Hong Kong.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will suspend all extradition of prisoners to Hong Kong where there is a possibility of the extradited person being handed over to the People's Republic of China authorities on 1 July 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans to suspend the return of fugitives to Hong Kong. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary can only order the return of a fugitive when all court proceedings in the United Kingdom have been concluded. If a fugitive offender is returned to Hong Kong under the Fugitive Offenders Act before 1997, that will be for an offence against Hong Kong laws. It will not be for offences against the laws of the PRC. The case will be heard by the Hong Kong courts. Under the joint declaration, Hong Kong will retain its separate legal system after 1997, and will not be relying on the PRC criminal code.

Mr. Ali Ghavami

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there is any financial or contractual relationship between Mr. Ali Ghavami, formerly an information officer at the Iranian embassy in London, and his Department in relation to his work in west Africa and elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no relationship between Mr. Ghavami and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

DEFENCE

Military Command Centres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is currently being planned or acted upon to update the United Kingdom's redevelopment and replacement of subordinate military command centres; what rank of people and personnel will use them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume that the surbordinate military command centres to which the hon. Member is referring are the area flag officers' headquarters, the Army district headquarters and the RAF group headquarters in the United Kingdom. There are no plans to replace these. A number of works programmes relating to them are at various stages of planning. It is not our practice to give details of the ranks of personnel stationed at particular locations.

Naval Headquarters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the plans for the (a) Royal Naval headquarters at Northwood and (b) Pitreavie castle, Fife; what ranks of personnel and people will be stationed at them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently, and for the foreseeable future, the functions of these headquarters are as follows:

Northwood is the headquarters of Commander-in-Chief Fleet, who also fills the NATO appointments of Commander-in-Chief Channel and Commander-in-Chief Eastern Atlantic; and of the Air Officer Commanding 18 group, who also fills the NATO appointments of Commander Air Eastern Atlantic and Commander Air Channel.

Pitreavie is the headquarters of Flag Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland, and of Air Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland, who both also fill NATO sub-area appointments relating to the Channel and Eastern Atlantic areas.

It is not our practice to give details of the ranks of personnel stationed at particular locations.

RAF Headquarters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the plans for the Royal Air Force headquarters at (a) High Wycombe, Buckinghamshire and (b) Stanmore, Middlesex; what ranks of people and personnel will be stationed there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently, and for the foreseeable future, the functions of these headquarters are as follows:

High Wycombe is the headquarters of the Air Oficer Commander-in-Chief, RAF Strike Command, who also fills the NATO appointment of Commander-in-Chief UK Air.

RAF Bentley Priory, which I assume the hon. Member has in mind when he refers to Stanmore, is the headquarters of Air Officer Commanding 11 group, and of the Royal Observer Corps.

It is not our practice to give details of the ranks of personnel stationed at particular locations.

Land Forces Headquarters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the current plans for the war headquarters of the Army's United Kingdom land forces command at Hawthorn, Wiltshire; what ranks of people and personnel will be stationed there; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the plans for the war headquarters of the Army's United Kingdom land forces command at Sopley, Hampshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The headquarters of United Kingdom land forces is at Wilton. It is not our practice to comment on the existence or otherwise of particular contingency plans relating to the outbreak of hostilities.

Nuclear Weapons (Accidents)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans his Department has for dealing with an accident involving (a) any seaborne, (b) any airborne or (c) any landborne nuclear weapon, in the course of non-operational activities, including courtesy calls in England and Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has contingency plans to deal with a wide range of possible accidents involving nuclear weapons in the United Kingdom. These are kept continuously under review and are tested regularly in exercises. Other Government Departments, local authorities and the civil emergency services are consulted where appropriate, and participate in exercises.

No. 2 Signals Brigade

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (a) present and (b) future role of No. 2 Signals Brigade; how many personnel and of what rank the brigade contains; where it will be stationed during (i) 1989, and (ii) 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role of 2 Signals Brigade is the provision of communications. The brigade has its headquarters at Corsham, Wiltshire and is currently stationed at 192 further locations. It is not our practice to give details of the strengths of operational formations.

Combat Body Armour

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has invited manufacturers to tender for the supply of combat body armour for general issue; and if combat body armour will be introduced into general service in 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury: Modifications were required to the original design in the light of experience during the troop trials. A further trial of the modified design is now taking place and should be completed shortly.

Manufacturers have not yet been invited to tender for the supply of combat body armour for general issue. Its introduction into general service is now expected to begin in 1990.

Greenham Common

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the rights of commoners at Greenham common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 29 April 1988 at columns 310-11. Negotiations are taking place over the extinguishing of rights of common in accordance with the relevant statutory procedures.

Exercises (West Germany)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations have been received from West German local governments in the past year concerning environmental damage by the British Army during exercises; if he will make a statement on the views expressed; and if he will outline the actions taken in the light of these representations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the past year, four representations were received from West German land governments about environmental damage caused by British troops during exercise; all have now been satisfactorily resolved. At lower level, there are frequent exchanges with stadt authorities about matters of mutual concern, and frequent meetings between civil and military authorities at which environmental matters are often discussed.

BAOR takes its obligation to protect the environment very seriously. All representations from local government in Germany are given careful and sympathetic consideration. Environmental issues are taken into account during the planning and conduct of exercises, and exercise play is adapted to meet local concerns where this can be done without unacceptable operational penalties. Some damage is, however, an unavoidable consequence of military training. Specific incidents are always fully investigated and a formal response made to any complaints. Well-established machinery exists for the quick processing of any claims.

Mr. Alan Thomas (Bonus)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 24 April, Official Report, column 367, how the performance bonus of the head of defence export services designate, Mr. Alan Thomas, will be calculated.

Mr. Sainsbury: As with other performance increments at senior levels in the Civil Service, this will be assessed judgmentally. The assessment will be made, within an annual maximum of £25,000, by senior officials, with Treasury representation.

Submarine Crews (Training)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect an answer to his letter, dated 12 May on the subject of the training of submarine crews.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 June 1989.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Loans and Grants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number and percentage of (a) budgetary loans and (b) community care grants awarded to the 15 client groups defined by his Department for each of the departments of social security serving Doncaster and Mexborough areas in the county of South Yorkshire for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table contains the provisional figures for the period 11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989.

Personal Data (Departmental Index)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the items of personal data held in the new computerised departmental central index, the size of the index, and how many accesses were made to the index over the last two months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Each record on the departmental central index holds up to five items of information relating to one person and the index currently holds around 60 million records. The information held is the person's name, date of birth, address, sex and date of death where appropriate. Over the last two months, 1,503,485 trace and inquiry accesses were made of the system.

Community Charge Rebate

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by each charging authority in Wales the income level at which (a) a single person aged under 25 years, (b) a single person aged over 25 years, (c) a single pensioner, (d) a pensioner couple and (e) a couple with two children all with no savings would lose entitlement to a community charge rebate, assuming the most recent safety-netted community charge figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

1. The levels of community charge used are the illustrative safety netted figures for 1989-90 given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales in reply to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 12 June 1989 at columns 303-6.
2. The net income levels shown have been derived using the current housing benefit rates and rules for calculating net income and applicable amounts. A maximum rebate of 80 per cent., a taper of 15 per cent., and a minimum weekly rebate of 50 pence per claim have been used.
3. The following assumptions have been made:
   (i) no claimant is disabled;
   (ii) each claimant under pension age is in full-time work;
   (iii) no claimant over pension age is working;
   (iv) each claimant with dependent children is in receipt of child benefit and, where appropriate, family credit;
   (v) each claimant has assessed capital of under £3,000.

HEALTH

Organ Transplants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health of he will list by year for the last 10 years, the number of times a recipient receiving a transplanted organ from a donor has been infected by a disease from the donor that was not diagnosed at the time; if he will show in his answer the type of disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive information is not collected centrally, but the number of cases of disease transmitted through transplants is believed to be very small.

Hospital Wards (Wirral)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many wards in the Wirral would be classified as deprived under the Jarman formula.

Mr. Freeman: Professor Jarman's index of comparative deprivation for the 22 local authority wards in the Wirral is shown in the table. This is based on a national average of zero with the large positive numbers indicating the most deprived areas and the large negative numbers the least. The index ranges nationally from +72·95 to −62·52.

Mental Illness and Handicap

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were discharged to the community from National Health Service mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units after a stay of one year or more in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the number of patients discharged to the community from National Health Service mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England after a stay of one year or more, for the period 1979 to 1986, the last year for which information is currently available. The table excludes death and transfers to other hospitals.

England (1979 to 1986)

1986	3,751	2,528	6,279

[1] Excludes deaths and transfers to other hospitals.

Food Safety

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often the expert committee on microbiological safety in food has met; what topics it has discussed; and if he will refer the recent botulism outbreak to it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The microbiological safety of food committee held its first meeting on 14 April, and has met at approximately weekly to fortnightly intervals since then. At the request of Ministers it has been looking at specific questions relating to the increasing incidence of microbiological illnesses of foodborne origin, particularly from salmonella, listeria and campylobacter. The committee has no role in the handling of acute emergencies such as the recent outbreak of botulism. Once the outbreak has been dealt with, the committee will be asked to consider and advise on its implications when formulating its recommendation on microbiological food safety.

Day Care

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a table listing (a) the current number of day care places for the elderly per 1,000 of the population aged 65 years and over and (b) the number of day care places for the mentally handicapped per 10,000 of the population for each local authority.

Mr. Freeman: "Adult Training Centres for Mentally Handicapped People and Day Centres for Mentally Ill, Mentally Handicapped, Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People, at 31 March 1987—England" shows at tables A and C for each local authority, per 1,000 population of the relevant age groups, the most recent numbers of day centre places for the elderly and for the mentally handicapped and of adult training centre places for the mentally handicapped. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of day care places for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the number of day care places provided by local authority social services departments in each of the years specified. In addition, day care places are provided by mental illness and mental handicap hospitals in England, but the number of such places is not centrally collected.

Number of places provided by local authorities

Salmonella (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the cases of salmonella poisoning reported in north Derbyshire during May.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1989]: We understand that 61 cases of salmonella poisoning have been reported in Chesterfield, north-east Derbyshire and Mansfield. The health authority is thoroughly investigating the source of the outbreak.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Kirklees

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the estimated total payment of a couple on average earnings living in a house valued at (a) £60,000, (b) £30,000 in the area covered by Kirklees council in 1990-91 under a system of local income tax and rates based on capital values.

Mr. Gummer: The level of bills under a system of local income tax and rates based on capital values would depend primarily on the level of expenditure undertaken by Kirklees council and the amount of support available from Government grants and business rates. Such figures for 1990-91 are not known. However, figures were placed in the Library on 23 June 1988 showing the tax rates which would have applied in 1988-89. Based on these figures, with capital value rates providing 80 per cent. of the total raised in local domestic taxes, a couple each earning average full-time wages, and with only the minimum tax allowance, would have paid £970 in a £60,000 house and £595 in a £30,000 house.

Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission (Grants)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants in aid were received by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England for the maintenance and running costs of the three former Greater London council properties, Kenwood house, Rangers house and Marble Hill house during the financial years 1986-87; 1987-88; 1988-89 and 1989-90 in cash and real terms; and how these grants were apportioned between the three properties.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The year 1986-87 was the only one in which a separately identifiable allocation of grant-in-aid was paid to the commission in respect of all the ex-GLC functions, including Kenwood house, Rangers house and Marble Hill house, for which it assumed responsibility; this amounted to £7·75 million in total. For subsequent years, provision for these properties was subsumed in the total grant-in-aid provision, the allocation of which is for the commission to decide. I have asked the chairman of the commission to write to my hon. Friend with the details he requests for 1986-87 and subsequent years.

Local Authority Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each financial year between 1983-84 and 1988-89 the number of local authority direct labour organisations which have failed to meet the required rate of return under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 on capital employed when undertaking (a) general highway works and works in connection with the construction or maintenance of a sewer, (b) new construction, other than general highway or sewer works, the cost of which in the estimation of the authority or development body exceeded £50,000, (c) new construction, other than general highway or sewer works, the cost of which in the estimation of the authority or development body did not exceed £50,000 and (d) building maintenance within the meaning of the Local Authorities (Goods and Services) Act 1970, other than in connection with highways or the maintenance of a sewer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of DLOs in England on which reports are submitted to the Department and which have failed to meet the required rate of return on capital employed under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 is indicated in the table.

	I	II	III	IV
1983-84	18	22	21	43
1984-85	20	23	12	44
1985-86	21	18	6	36
1986-87	21	8	5	13

I Highways.
II Major Construction (over £50,000).
III Minor Construction (under £50,000).
IV Maintenance.

The Department has not yet completed its examinations of DLO reports for 1987-88 and those for 1988-89 are not required to be received until 31 October 1989.

Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he intends placing staff of his Department in valuation and community charge tribunal offices; and what assessment he has made as to how these placements will affect the independence of the tribunal system.

Mr. Gummer: A small number of staff with specialised computer skills are to assist the clerks of the valuation and community charge tribunals in the use of new computer systems. The independence of the tribunal system is not affected.

Bed and Breakfast (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were living in bed and breakfast accommodation in each of the London boroughs on 1 June 1989.

Mr. Trippier: The latest available figures, for the end of March 1989, appear in table 7 of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter of 1989. Supplementary Tables", which is in the Library.

Rhinoceros Horn and Ivory

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to combat illegal trade in rhinoceros horn and ivory.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The United Kingdom implements the provisions of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora (CITES) under which commercial trade in rhinoceros and the Indian elephant is already prohibited. The European Council of Environment Ministers agreed on 8 June to support the extension of such a ban to the African elephant. A ban on imports of ivory into the United Kingdom came into force on 9 June. All these measures help prevent illegal trading.

Parliamentary Offices (Heating)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the heating in the parliamentary offices in which hon. Members' secretaries work is not switched on when Parliament is not sitting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Because members and staff continue to use their offices the heating is not turned off automatically at the start of a recess. This year the heating was first turned off on 8 May during the period of warm weather.

Fauna and Flora

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will reconsider his opposition to the European Community directive on fauna, flora and habitats; what steps he proposes to take or is taking to protect endangered species of fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to support attendance by non-governmental organisations at meetings convened to discuss the implementation and management of the European Community directive 8149/88, when it is adopted.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not opposed to the principle of Community action to protect Europe's natural heritage. However the European Commission's proposal for a directive on the protection of natural and semi-natural habitats and of fauna and flora (8149/88) was unanimously rejected by member states at the Environmental Council on 24 November 1988. Instead, there was agreement that Community action could most usefully be focussed on assisting member states, as necessary, to implement fully the existing international conventions. We remain ready to discuss any sensible and practicable proposals to secure this objective.

Local Authority Dwellings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the estimated total capital value of dwellings owned by local authorities in England and Wales and the estimated outstanding loan debt on such dwellings.

Mr. Gummer: Total outstanding loan debt on local authority owned dwellings in England and Wales at 31 March 1987 was approximately £25 billion. The Department does not collect information on the capital value of local authority dwellings. However, the 1986 English house condition survey estimated the total capital value of local authority stock in England and Wales at 1 November 1986 to be £123 billion, based on market value with vacant possession.

Offshore Mineral Dredging

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the procedure that will be employed, under the recently announced review of licence applications for mineral dredging offshore to ensure that such activities are not damaging to the fish stocks, sea bird populations and marine mammals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The revised procedures for determining licence applications for minerals dredging issued earlier this year make provision for an environmental assessment (EA) to be undertaken into the application where the Crown Estate Commissioners judge this to be necessary.

Among the criteria used to assess the need for an EA are the potential impact of the dredging area on a marine nature reserve; the inclusion in the dredging areas of an important fish (including shell fish) spawning area or nursery ground; or whether the dredging area is within an area which supports a known important commercial fishery. A copy of the revised procedures is available in the Library.

These new procedures reflect the important role which marine sand and gravel play in maintaining supplies to the construction industry whilst recognising the need to safeguard sea fisheries and the marine environment.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce new legislation to safeguard listed buildings where redevelopment is proposed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. We are satisfied that existing legislation provides an adequate framework for the protection of listed buildings.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those schemes in the City of London which he has approved since June 1987 which would allow developers to pull down listed buildings;

(2) if he will list those schemes which he has approved since June 1987 which would allow developers to pull down five or more grade 2 listed buildings to enable redevelopment to go ahead.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the criteria he uses to determine whether listed buildings should be retained in applications for redevelopment;

(2) if, in the light of his decision to allow redevelopment of the Mappin and Webb site in the City of London, he will make a statement on his policy as regards preserving listed buildings.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's policy and criteria in respect of the protection of listed buildings are set out in DoE circular 8/87.

Immigrating Birds (Protected Species)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure the adequate protection of immigrating birds of protected species.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Wildlife and Countryside Act provides a statutory framework for the protection of all wild birds in Great Britain including those who migrate here from overseas. Where appropriate, further action is taken through the classification of special protection areas under article 4 of EC directive 79/409 EEC.

Endangered Species

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he follows in determining appeals against refusal for import licences under CITES; how many such applications have been made in each of the last three years; and of these how many were approved.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Applications for import licences are decided on their merits, in the light of advice from our scientific advisers and in accordance with the requirements of EC regulation 3626/82 which implements the convention on international Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) within the European Community. There is no statutory right of appeal against the refusal of an import licence, but if new evidence is presented the Department is normally willing to reconsider applications which have been refused. The Department has no record of the number of applications which have been reconsidered.

Submarine Base, Faslane

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the length of delay in the construction of the ship lift in the Clyde submarine base at Faslane; what penalty clauses exist in the contract; and if any of these clauses have been invoked.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on Tuesday 23 May at column 497. The contract does not contain penalty clauses, but liquidated damages may be invoked once a contract completion data has been passed. For commercial reasons it would not be appropriate to comment further at this stage.

SCOTLAND

Gaelic Broadcasting

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with (a) BBC Scotland, and (b) STV on the future of Gaelic broadcasting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Earlier this year I met the chief executives of Scottish Television, Grampian Television and Border Television to discuss their views on the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" and on the possible future arrangements for broadcasting in Scotland, including the future of Gaelic broadcasting. My officials had similar discussions with staff of BBC Scotland and last December I discussed Gaelic broadcasting with BBC representatives at the offices of Radio Nan Eilean in Stornoway. In April this year, I met representatives of Comunn na Gaidhlig specifically to hear their views on the future of Gaelic broadcasting.

As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary said during his statement on 13 June, we will make announcements before long on our proposals for Gaelic broadcasting.

Severe Weather (Highlands and Islands)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to respond to the several letters outstanding from the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye concerning specific cases of individual financial losses or commercial damage as a result of the severe weather conditions in the Highlands and Islands earlier in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A reply covering all eight cases raised by the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye was sent by my noble Friend the Minister of State on 27 April, the day on which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced the Government's package of measures for assisting with storm damage Hansard, columns 609-12.

A follow-up letter from the hon. Member on behalf of one of the cases involved is being considered and a reply will be issued shortly.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider introducing a link between rate poundages in Scotland and the new unified business rate to be applied in England after 1990.

Mr. Lang: We have announced firm proposals to achieve a common rate poundage for Scotland at the same level as for England. We are seeking powers through the current Local Government and Housing Bill to enable us to prescribe the actual non-domestic rate of each local authority for a transitional period beginning in 1990-91. Our intention is that rate poundages in Scotland will generally be reduced relative to the uniform business rate in England and Wales so that, after five years or so, they will be brought into line with the rate in England and Wales.

Mr. Kirkwood To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider introducing an extension of the mechanism of industrial derating to commercial premises in Scotland in the period leading up to the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Lang: The future of industrial derating will fall to be considered once the likely effect of the 1990 revaluations on different sides of the Border and on different sectors of property become known later this year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide for interim relief to business rate payers in Scotland to take account of the discrepancies in rates paid north and south of the English border in the period leading up to the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Lang: The plans I have announced will ensure that the discrepancies are removed on a reasonable timetable which takes account of the likely timetable of changes in England and Wales.

Land Registration (Scotland) Act 1979

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress being made to implement the provisions of the Land Registration (Scotland) Act 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Progress to date has been as follows:

Operational area and date of implementation
County of Renfrew—6 April 1981.
County of Dumbarton—4 October 1982.
County of Lanark—3 January 1984.
County of the Barony and Regality of Glasgow—30 September 1985.

These four counties contain about 30 per cent. of the housing stock of Scotland.

Further extension of the Land Register will be undertaken once current backlogs in the General Register of Sasines and the Land Register have been substantially reduced.

Local Health Councils

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future role of local health councils in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am considering a number of proposals put to me, and I shall make an announcement on this in the near future.

General Register of Sasines

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the average length of time it has taken to record a deed in the General Register of Sasines over the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Average turnround time in days

Year	Days
1979	63
1980	64
1981	85
1982	79
1983	115
1984	123
1985	110
1986	110
1987	137
1988	158

Note: Turnround time is the number of calendar days between receipt of a writ for recording and its return to the presenter.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take urgent steps to introduce common methods for use by assessors in Scotland when deciding questions relating to the status of tourist accommodation to include guidance in the assessment of the domestic element in computing the commercial rateable value of hotels and guest houses, the criteria to be used to classify bed-and-breakfast establishments as commercial subjects not subject to the standard community charge and circumstances to be taken into account in deciding whether self-catering cottages are subject to the payment of the full standard community charge.

Mr. Lang: There are no plans to do this. The decisions of assessors and community charges registration officers in matters of this kind are subject to appeal.

Solicitors' Fees and Court Expenses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that statutory instruments dealing with matters such as solicitors' fees and court expenses are not implemented until after the regulations are made available to the legal profession.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I appreciate the desire of solicitors for adequate notification of forthcoming revisions to solicitors fees and court expenses. The normal arrangements for publishing statutory instruments permit this.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to monitor the effect the introduction of the community charge is having on the tourist industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The effects of rating reform on the various sectors of the tourist industry are being looked at in the light of representations which have been received.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Scottish tourist industry to discuss the effects on tourism of the introduction of the community charge in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

East Kilbride Development Corporation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to maintain the existing number of appointees from local authorities to the board of East Kilbride development corporation when appointments fall to be made to the board.

Mr. Lang: In appointing members to new town development corporations, the Secretary of State is required to consult the local authorities and to have regard to the desirability of securing the services of at least one person resident in or having special knowledge of the locality. Both East Kilbride district council and Strathclyde regional council have been invited to offer nominees for vacancies due to arise in the board of East Kilbride development corporation on 1 January 1990. I cannot say at this stage what will be the outcome of that consultation, but all members are appointed because of the contribution their personal qualities enable them to make to the new towns.

Forestry Commission Land

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government has with regard to the disposal of Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Rifkind: In answer to a question from the hon. Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 8 November 1984 (Official Report, columns 6-7), my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) announced that the Forestry Commission's disposals programme would be extended to 31 March 1989, and that its main purpose would be to rationalise the forestry estate thereby improving the commission's efficiency and the commercial effectiveness of the forestry enterprise.

We welcome the important contribution that the rationalisation of the forestry estate has made to the increased efficiency of the forestry enterprise over the past few years. The commission has been able to dispose of a large number of plantations in a way which has assisted the streamlining of its management structure and enabled it to achieve significant improvements in its operational efficiency. The annual net call on Exchequer funds for the enterprise has been greatly reduced. At the same time the commission has been able to make an important contribution to the major new developments which have taken place in the wood-processing industry in recent years. The market for timber is now buoyant, to the great benefit of both public and private sector timber-growers.

My right hon. Friends and I have considered the future extent and purpose of the commission's disposal programme. We have had regard to the needs of the wood-processing industry for a steady and secure source of supply; to the effect of the programme on the use of the commission's forests for public access and recreation; and to environmental considerations. We also accept that the commission must be able to plan ahead without the uncertainty caused by frequent reviews, and that it will continue to make a small but effective contribution towards the fulfilment of our targets for new planting.

We consider that the rationalisation policy has been successful and that there is scope for it to continue to be pursued with vigour. In accordance with the general policy of this Government, we also wish to see some further transfer of forests out of the public sector. This will have the important effect of strengthening and enhancing the role of the private sector, whose proportion of the nation's woodland estate has already risen to over 60 per cent. We also see it as a valuable opportunity to widen interest and participation in British forestry.

We have therefore asked the Forestry Commissioners to proceed with the further disposal of some 100,000 hectares of forestry land and properties in the period up to the end of the century, of which they should seek to dispose of some 50,000 hectares in the first half of the period. The commissioners will continue to be responsible for selecting properties for sale, and in doing so they will have regard to the selection guidelines which forestry Ministers set them in 1981. In particular I have referred to the use of the commission's forests for public access and recreation, which my right hon. Friends and I warmly support and encourage. Forests have a major part to play in the enjoyment and understanding of the countryside and the commission will continue to have an important role in this.

We are concerned, however, that the general public should also continue to enjoy access to those forests to be disposed of by the commission in a way which is compatible with management for forestry and other purposes. We are therefore giving careful consideration to ways of achieving the objective.

It is estimated that, subject to market factors, the programme which we have now asked the commissioners to carry out should realise up to £150 million over the period. By settling this issue for a decade, we intend to put the commissioners in a position to implement the programme so as to consolidate their forestry estate in a rational and orderly manner.

Head Injuries (Rehabilitation Centre)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the need to establish a centre in the south of Scotland for the rehabilitation of persons suffering from head injuries; and what progress has been made in funding the necessary resources and possible site for such a centre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 June 1989]: I have had a number of letters about improving rehabilitation services in Scotland for people suffering from head injuries. I expect to receive a report very shortly, following a study by the Scottish Home and Health Department, on how these services could be improved, and what arrangements for funding and location would be appropriate.

PRIME MINISTER

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will meet President-elect Carlos Menem to discuss the future of the Falkland Islands.

The Prime Minister: No.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Namibian Refugees

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money Her Majesty's Government has allocated to assist in the repatriation of Namibian refugees; and how this will be deployed.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have provided £1·15 million—£500,000 to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and £650,000 to the World Food Programme for food for the returnees.

Aid

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) of 12 June, Official Report, column 274, what figures he used for (a) net development assistance, and (b) gross national product, in calculating the figure of 0·32 per cent.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures are as follows:

	£ million
Net official development assistance	1,467·84
Gross national product	459,610

Grants

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the grants to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations engaged in overseas development made by the European Community in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: Under its NGO programme the European Community co-finances projects in developing countries and development education projects with European NGOs. Normally the Community contributes 50 per cent. of the costs of individual projects. In 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, amounts granted to United Kingdom NGOs were as follows:

1. For projects in developing countries

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which official bodies and organisations outside the United Kingdom make grants to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations engaged in overseas development after either consulting or obtaining the approval of his Department.

Mr. Chris Patten: There are no formal arrangements for organisations outside the United Kingdom to consult my Department or seek its approval before making grants to United Kingdom voluntary agencies engaged in overseas development. But we are happy to put such organisations in touch with British agencies if asked to do so; and we have taken the initiative in encouraging the Japanese to use their grant aid in support of projects undertaken in developing countries by British and other third country NGOs.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Dennis Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects were discussed at his last meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I last met representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland at the meeting of the intergovernmental conference in Belfast on 24 May. At that meeting we completed the review of the working of the conference and copies of the joint statement were placed in the Library.

Mitchell House School for the Handicapped

Mr. John D. Taylor (Strafford): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils are resident at Mitchell House school for the handicapped, Holywood road, Belfast; what proposals he has for them after the closure of this school; and at which other similar schools there is residential accommodation available for these students.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 15 June 1989]: Ten pupils are currently attending the boarding department at Mitchell House special school, Belfast. The only other school providing residential accommodation for physically handicapped pupils is Fleming Fulton special school, Belfast. I understand that the Belfast education and library board is currently considering the closure of the boarding department at Mitchell House school but no decision has yet been taken. Should the board decide to close this facility, it would be required to publish a development proposal which would enable objectors to make their views known to the Department of Education within two months. The Department would have the ultimate decision in the matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Press (Referral)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current position of the referral of the press to the Office of Fair Trading and Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading is continuing his inquiries into the structure of newspaper publishing, competition between newspapers, and the involvement of newspaper groups in other media. If a full-scale investigation were seen to be necessary it would be likely to take the form of a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Inflation

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the effects of the level of inflation on industry.

Mr. Forth: A number of representations which I receive refer to inflation. The great majority of these recognise that the control of inflation must remain the prime objective of economic policy.

Manufactures (Trade Deficit)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the present trade deficit on manufactured goods.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first four months of 1989 there was an estimated seasonally adjusted deficit in trade in manufactures of £5·8 billion.

Open University Technology Centre

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to visit the newly founded centre for technology strategy at the Open university in Milton Keynes.

Mr. Forth: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is aware of the recent formation of the centre for technology strategy at the Open university in Milton Keynes but has no plans for a visit.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Full Funding

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he expects to achieve through the Government's policy of full funding.

Mr. Lilley: The aim of the full fund policy is that the Government should conduct their own financial affairs so as to have a broadly neutral impact on liquidity.

Housing Costs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to the Economic Secretary's answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 12 June, Official Report, column 272, he will indicate what other housing costs are included in the Italian index of consumer prices quoted by him on 7 June; and what housing costs other than mortgage interest payments are included in the United Kingdom retail price index figures.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 15 June 1989]: The only housing costs included in the Italian consumer price index are rent, water charges and repairs. The housing group of the United Kingdom RPI includes rent, domestic rates, water and other charges, repair and maintenance charges, do-it-yourself materials and dwelling insurance and ground rents as well as mortgage interest payments.

CIVIL SERVICE

Crown Servants (Business Appointments)

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will publish a further report on business appointments of former Crown servants.

Mr. Luce: I have today placed copies of a statistical report entitled "Acceptance of Outside Appointments by Crown Servants—1988" in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

TRANSPORT

Lead in Paint

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects lead to be eliminated from paint used for road markings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The constituents of road materials are specified by the British Standards Institution. I understand that the institution has not yet set a timetable for substituting a lead-free pigment in their specification. Work to develop such a pigment of acceptable performance and durability is in progress.

Pervious Road Surfaces

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions have been drawn from the research into pluvious road surfaces being carried out at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory with regard to (a) whether spray-reducing benefit can be applied to the resurfacing of existing roads and (b) whether this will be a general specification of new roads as proposed in the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory has been undertaking a full-scale trial of pervious macadam road surfaces since 1984 on the A38 Burton bypass.

Trials of new materials normally last for five years so that their performance can be compared with conventional materials before they are permitted for general use.

In this case the material appears to be as durable as conventional materials and is effective in reducing vehicle spray.

We are proposing to amend the Department's specification to allow the use of pervious macadam on new or existing trunk roads. The aim is to issue it early in 1990 as soon as the trials have been completed and the results fully assessed. This will depend on those results being satisfactory.

Pervious macadam could prove more expensive than conventional materials and if so its use is more likely to be justified on sections of road where, for example, increased accident savings can be demonstrated.

MV Majestic (Sinking)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the circumstances in which the fishing vessel MV Majestic was sunk between Shetland and Orkney on 13 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Fraserburgh registered fishing vessel Majestic capsized and sank some 30 miles west of Sumburgh Head at about 1300 on 13 June with the loss of five lives. Two crew survived.

The vessel was pair trawling at the time of the incident when the net snagged on an underwater obstruction. There are no indications at this stage of any involvement by a submarine.

One of the Department's marine surveyors has been appointed to investigate the casualty.

Birmingham Relief Road

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was his Department's latest estimated cost for completion of the previously preferred route for the Birmingham relief road; and if he will estimate the number of man hours his Department has spent on the previously preferred route.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 June 1989]: The estimated cost of the Birmingham northern relief road is £219·5 million at May 1989 prices. The Department is unable to disaggregate the number of man hours spent on individual schemes.

ENERGY

Electricial Supply Industry

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current number of people employed in the electrical supply industry by region.

Mr. Parkinson: This is a matter for the electricity supply industry. I shall ask the Chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

Rexo (Member's Letter)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is now in a position to reply and treat as a matter of urgency the letter from the hon. Member for Bassetlaw of 11 April regarding redundancy payments at Rexo which was passed on to him by the Department of Employment on 30 May.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The hon. Member should now have received my reply which was sent on 14 June.

WALES

School-Business Links

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's policy of encouraging high schools in Wales to develop links with businesses.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is important that there should be effective links between schools and business so that young people have the opportunity to experience the world of work and learn about the career choices available to them, and business has a workforce better prepared and equipped to meet its needs.

We have a range of activities designed to improve communications between schools and industry and to encourage enterprise activities in schools. The Technical and Vocational Education Initiative has proved successful and is being extended to all schools and colleges. The GCSE examination has an emphasis on learning by experience and the certificate of pre-vocational education also assists in the transition from school to adulthood and the world of work. The new national curriculum has as one of its main aims the preparation of pupils for adult life and work. Businessmen also have the opportunity to become governors of schools and colleges.

Each local education authority in Wales has an officer responsible for education/industry links and there is evidence of increasing interest in organisations at the local level working to develop partnerships between education and industry.

In addition, we now have a network of enterprise and education advisers whose purpose is to market to employers the benefits of links with schools and persuade them to become involved. Also, in the context of my valleys programme, I have met with the chairmen of the education committee and director of education of each of the five valleys LEAs to discuss ways of improving links between schools and industry. Positive action has already been taken and I hope to have further meetings in the near future.

Sewage Works (Pollution Standards)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list sewage works in Wales that are at present failing the established effluent pollution standards.

Mr. Grist: The following Welsh Water Authority sewage treatment works failed to meet their consent standards during 1988:

Local Authority Houses

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of local authority houses to rent by district in Wales in (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is as follows:

Estimates of dwellings owned by local authorities or new towns at 1 April[1]

Welsh Districts	1986	1987	1988
Aberconwy	3,227	3,139	3,060
Alyn and Deeside	5,573	5,503	5,415

Cottage-Community Hospitals

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he can give for each county in Wales the number of cottage-community hospitals with fewer than 70 beds in (a) 1985 and (b) 1988, and the percentage these represented of the total number of hospitals in (i) 1985 and (ii) 1988.

Mr. Grist: The total number of hospitals, including psychiatric hospitals, with less than 70 beds are shown in the table:

Health Authority	Number of hospitals with fewer than 70 beds[1] 1985	1988	Percentage of all hospitals in authority 1985	1988

Rivers (Pollution Standards)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those rivers in Wales which in 1988 were graded 3 and lower in pollution standards.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh Water Authority and I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Small Businesses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time taken to process applications for discretionary grants in respect of capital investments by small businesses; and what action is being taken by his Department to reduce the time taken to process applications and forward grants.

Mr. Peter Walker: The main forms of discretionary grants towards capital investment by small firms are regional enterprise grants (investment) and regional selective assistance. The average times taken to process grant applications and payment claims during the period 1 January—31 May 1989 were as follows:

	Weeks
Regional enterprise grants (investment) applications	3·9
Regional enterprise grants (investment) payment claims	1·2
Regional selective assistance applications	7
Regional selective assistance payment claims	3·1

The Department is continuing its downward pressure on processing times consistent with the proper administration of the scheme.

Botulism

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration was given by officers of his Department to the need to publish advice to the public in Wales prior to the Government's recommendation on Monday 12 June that people should not consume hazelnut yoghurt pending the outcome of investigations into the recent incidents of botulism.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department became aware of suspected cases of botulism associated with the consumption of hazelnut yoghurt on 12 June. Standard arrangements are that the Department of Health notifies national and regional media interests in such cases, including those in Wales. Copies of the Department of Health's press statement were subsequently sent by my Department to chief environmental health officers and medical officers for environmental health in Wales for information.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what information he has available on the cases of botulism in Clwyd referred to in the answer of his right hon. Friend to the private notice question on Tuesday 13 June.

Mr Peter Walker: My officials are in close touch with the chief administrative medical officer/director of public health medicine in Clwyd health authority regarding the four suspected cases of botulism. Investigations are continuing as to the source of the outbreak.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research projects into food hygiene and food production are currently sponsored by his Department; what resources are allocated to each project and what plans he has for expanding such research in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department has no agricultural research funds. Last year the Government funded 436 research projects on food in England and Wales. Details can be found in the draft National Programme of Food R&D 1988-89, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House on 13 June 1989.

Future plans for Government funded research will be guided by the advice of the Research Consultative Committee on Food Safety and Applied Nutrition which is expected to report at the end of August. This Government are firmly committed to food safety research and will place the work with the most appropriate contractors.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to increase the resources available to local authorities in Wales to enable them to increase the number of environmental health officers available to inspect food producing and processing establishments in view of fresh public concern over dangers to health.

Mr. Grist: Provision for local authority spending in 1989-90 was announced in the rate support grant report published on 8 December 1988. My officials are presently discussing with the local authority associations their need to spend for 1990-91.

The bulk of resources provided to local authorities are unhypothecated: it is for the individual authority to determine its own spending priorities.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure the future security of adequate funding levels with predictable continuity for S4C in the light of the statement on 13 June, by the Home Secretary on the future of commercial television.

Mr. Peter Walker: The White Paper on broadcasting made clear the Government's view that S4C has been a considerable success. At present the Independent Broadcasting Authority determines the channel's level of income. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I envisage that the Independent Television Commission and S4C will make similar arrangements to ensure adequate funding for the channel in the future.

HEALTH

Project 2000

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the level of bursaries to be paid to nursing students undertaking the first Project 2000 training courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have accepted the proposal of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, made after consultation with the nursing professions, that Project 2000 students should have student, rather than employee, status and receive bursaries rather than salaries. The personal element of these bursaries will not be means-tested.

Project 2000 students in receipt of bursaries will not be liable for income tax or national insurance or superannuation contributions. All Project 2000 students will pay only 20 per cent. of the personal community charge, like other full-time students, and will have the benefit of seven weeks' holiday each year, compared with the four or five weeks for those who continue to be trained under the existing arrangements.

The following basic levels of bursary are to be offered to students undertaking Project 2000 courses. They are broadly comparable with the average net basic salary of existing student nurses.

Under 26 at start of course:

London:	4,700
Elsewhere:	4,000

Age 26 and over at start of course:

London:	5,200
Elsewhere:	4,500

In addition to the above basic/personal levels of bursary, there will be additions for dependents which will be means-tested on the basis of Department of Education and Science mandatory grant rules.

Existing NHS staff who enter Project 2000 training, provided they have been employed at least one year, will retain their current salary rather than receiving a bursary.

Pre-registration nursing students who are not on Project 2000 courses will continue to receive salaries.

Private Patients (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue generated from private patients at hospitals in the Doncaster area in 1988; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last 10 years, at 1989 prices.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table.

Income from private patients: Doncaster health authority (at 1988-89 prices)

1978-79	17,141
1979-80	19,611
1980-81	27,382
1981-82	50,428
1982-83	53,757
1983-84	46,051
1984-85	52,258
1985-86	71,592
1986-87	79,595
1987-88	[1]65,837

[1] Latest available.

Notes:

1. The figures have been expressed at 1988-89 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
2. The Doncaster health authority was established on 1 April 1982. The figures used for earlier years are derived from the annual accounts of the former Doncaster area health authority which was broadly comparable to the present district health authority.

Community Charge

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance has been given to registered medical practitioners on issuing certificates for poll tax exemption on the grounds that the individual is severely mentally impaired; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has issued any guidance in relation to the poll tax on the question as to whether those seeking a certificate of exemption from a registered medical practitioner will be required to undergo any examination; who will pay for any such examination; if there will be guidance on any standard scale of charges; how much will be charged for such certificates; and who will be required to make the payment.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Guidance to registered medical practitioners on issuing certificates of severe mental impairment in connection with applications for exemption from payment of the personal community charge will be issued as soon as possible.

Queen's Park Hospital, Blackburn (Maternity Unit)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the North West regional health authority since 14 April regarding provision of a maternity unit at Queen's park hospital, Blackburn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health will be meeting the chairman of North Western regional health authority on 19 June to discuss the implications of the extension of maternity services in phase IIIA of Queen's Park hospital, Blackburn, for the region's current review of its capital programme. It is unlikely that the outcome of the review will be known before the autumn of this year.

Miss Claire Johnson

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department's superannuation branch first received a request to transfer pension rights in respect of Miss Claire Johnson from the National Health Service to the Professional Association of Teachers; why it has failed to reply; and when he expects the transfer to be effected.

Mr. Freeman: National Health Service superannuation branch first received a request to transfer Miss Johnson's pension rights on 30 August 1988 when the Professional Association of Teachers (PAT) wrote. They enclosed a copy of correspondence they had sent to Central Nottinghamshire health authority about the same subject.

No reply, apart from an inquiry of the PAT about their scheme and routine acknowledgements, has yet been sent because the transfer value of the service was not apparently available. The health authority had exceptionally given details of Miss Johnson's final year's salary on 28 April 1988 when giving details about the cessation of her employment. This information was overlooked when the transfer request was received. A standard inquiry was therefore sent to the authority on 23 September 1988. Only when a belated reply was received on 8 May 1989 was attention drawn to the previous information.

Urgent action is being taken to give details of a pension transfer value. Miss Johnson will then have the option of transferring the pension value or leaving it in the National Health Service scheme.

Pharmacists

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 May to the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) setting out the amount due to pharmacists from 1978 to 1988, if he will specify the amounts included which are in respect of drug and container cost reimbursement; whether the amounts due for profit are stated on a pre-interest basis; if he will express these as a percentage of turnover; and if he will give estimates of the amount due for costs in £m and the profit in £m and percentage of turnover for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1989]: The figures given in my reply to the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) on 18 May at column 284, excluded the payments made as reimbursement of expenditure on drugs and containers. The amounts due for profit included interest on capital employed. Amounts due for profit expressed as a percentage of amounts paid as reimbursement of expenditure on drugs and containers in England and Wales were as follows:

Year	Percentage
1978	3·57
1979	3·52
1980	4·78
1981	5·48
1982	5·10
1983	4·67
1984	4·62
[1]1985	5·28
1985-86	5·19
1986-87	4·79
1987-88	4·58

[1] 1 January 1985 to 31 March 1985.

Current estimates for 1988-89 are: amount due for costs £437·2 million amount due for profit £70·7 million, profit as a percentage of drug and container costs 3·68 per cent. As from 1 April 1989 amounts due for costs and profit are no longer calculated as separate items of remuneration.

Portable Oxygen Cylinders

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of a portable oxygen cylinder; and what guidance he issues to doctors on the provision of portable oxygen cylinders for use in the home and elsewhere by patients with chronic lung disease.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1989]: The basic cost of a portable oxygen cylinder is at least £157·00. Such equipment for use in the home and elsewhere may be provided through the hospital service on the prescription of a hospital consultant if he considers it clinically necessary for the treatment of his patient. Guidance on the provision of oxygen and other specialised equipment is contained in the booklet MHM50, "Provision of Medical and Surgical Appliances". A copy is in the Library.

Nebulisers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will ensure that compressor-driven nebuliser systems are made available to patients when so advised by a consultant with specialist knowledge in thoracic medicine.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1989]: It is for health authorities to decide whether to issue compressor-driven nebuliser systems (either permanently or on loan) to patients for whom they are prescribed by hospital consultants. In making these decisions, health authorities will have regard to the costs of the equipment and its potential benefit to patients and the competing claims on available resources.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions, and by what means, his Department has drawn the attention of the medical profession to the dangers of represcribing benzodiazepine drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1989]: The Department issues regular advice to doctors on a wide range of topics which from time to time include guidance on the prescribing of benzodiazepines. Exampls include:

(i) Guidance on Good Clinical Practice in the Treatment of Drug Misuse, issued free in 1984 and 1985 to all doctors, includes advice on withdrawal from benzodiazepines. This publication is also issued annually to medical schools for distribution to final year medical students.

(ii) The Committee on Safety of Medicines reinforced prescribing advice on benzodiazepines in "Current Problems No. 21" issued in January 1988.

(iii) Up-to-date information on benzodiazepine prescribing is included in the British National Formulary, which is issued twice a year free to all doctors, pharmacists and to all first and final year medical students.

(iv) The Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin, issued fortnightly and distributed free by the Department has, on occasions, published articles on benzodiazepines.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has received from the Committee on the Safety of Medicines on the use and prescribing of benzodiazepine drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1989]: The Committee on the Safety of Medicines advice about the use and prescribing of these drugs remains as published in its bulletin "Current Problems No. 21" issued in January 1988. A copy is in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his latest meeting with the chargé d'affairs at the Chinese embassy in London.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend's latest meeting with the Chinese chargé d'affaires was on 5 June. He reported this meeting to the House on 6 June. A senior official had a meeting with the Chinese chargé d'affaires on 12 June, at which he further clarified our view of events in Peking, particularly with respect to the prospects and procedures for the implimentation of the joint declarations on Hong Kong. He also raised reports of Chinese embassy harassment of Chinese students here and the case of the Hong Kong resident detained in Shanghai.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning allegations that Chinese students in this country have received threatening telephone calls from officials at the Chinese embassy; whether he has made representations to the Chinese chargé d'affaires on the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have noted press reports that the Chinese embassy has been harassing Chinese students in this country. A senior official raised this matter with the Chinese chargé d'affaires on 12 June and reminded him that we expected the Chinese embassy to act in accordance with British law. The Chinese chargé d'affaires said that the reports were a complete fabrication.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will grant to Chinese students studying in the United Kingdom, on completion of their courses, extension of stay until their safety can be guaranteed.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I have given today to questions from the hon. Members for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) and for Tooting (Mr. Cox).

Hong Kong

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to amend the treaty with China to exclude the stationing of the Chinese army in Hong Kong after 1997.

Mr. Eggar: The prospect of the stationing of Chinese troops in Hong Kong after 1997 has always been a matter of concern in the territory. Recent events have increased this. We shall be considering how best to meet this concern when we resume our discussions with the Chinese authorities about the future of Hong Kong. But we have no plans to seek to amend the joint declaration, which is a solemn international agreement equally binding both Governments.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had seeking to ensure that a democratic Government are fully in place in Hong Kong before 1997.

Mr. Eggar: In the light of recent events in China, and evidence of a change of opinion in Hong Kong, we and the Hong Kong Government are considering carefully suggestions for advancing and consolidating effective democracy in Hong Kong. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State discussed this question with the Governor of Hong Kong on his visit to London last week and will be having further discussions with a broad range of Hong Kong opinion when he visits the territory early next month.

Mr. Wajid Mahmood

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Wajid Mahmood, whose date of birth is 19 July 1971 and whose reference is IMM/92276, first applied to the post in Islamabad for permission to enter the United Kingdom; and when a decision is to be taken on his application.

Mr. Eggar: In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

Mr. Abbass Tabbakhi (Execution)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the execution without trial in Iran of Mr. Abbass Tabbakhi of Forest Gate, London E7; when Mr Tabbakhi was arrested; when he was executed; and if he will make the stongest representation to the Iranian Government about the execution of Mr. Tabbakhi.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no information about the case of Mr. Tabbakhi. It is usually impossible to verify reports of individual executions in Iran, given the absence of information about the situation there. We have consistently expressed concern about Iran's human rights record and have taken vigorous action at the UN to try to persuade Iran to allow the UN special rapporteur to visit that country.

Sharks (Slaughter)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of Japan and South Korea regarding the slaughter of sharks in the waters around the Galapagos Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have asked the Japanese and South Korean Governments for assurances that their fishing fleets around the Galapagos Islands are acting in accordance with their obligations on the protection of endangered species. Sharks are not protected under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES).

Private Education

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the sons and daughters of Foreign Office personnel can receive grants towards the cost of private education; and whether the Foreign and Commonwealth Office keeps a list of schools approved for the education of such young people.

Mr. Eggar: All members of the Diplomatic Service who have an obligation to serve overseas are eligible to apply for an allowance towards the costs of their children's boarding school education. The allowance is paid in order that children may be guaranteed continuity of education in the British system. In certain cases, provided the paramount principle of continuity is observed, it may be possible for an officer to be refunded the cost of private day school fees at a boarding school where the child will be educated when his/her parents are abroad.

The allowance is based on an average of the fees of schools on the Headmasters Conference list, but attendance is not limited to those schools. Any United Kingdom boarding school can be approved, provided that it offers the full range of subjects normally offered by a state day school and in a form generally available in the state system. No attempt is made to keep a comprehensive list of schools which meet those criteria.

Staff whose children are resident with them overseas may reclaim the cost of local private education in countries where the state education system is inadequate or unsuitable. Refunds in such cases are limited to tuition or scholastic activities of a kind which would be provided without cost under the United Kingdom state education services. Each overseas post maintains its own list of authorised schools.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current checks and controls for salmonella enteritidis undertaken by continental egg producers who export their produce to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to differentiate between eggs being sold in retail outlets for tested flocks as opposed to untested laying flocks.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is a legal requirement that all UK flocks selling eggs should be tested. As for imports, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 20 April at column 280.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received for and against the continued sale of untreated green top milk; and whether he is now in a position to make a statement on such sales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 13 June at column 353.

Beef

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about seasonal variations in the price of beef and consequent shortages; and if he will make a statement about any proposals to alter support arrangements in order to ensure that there is a more even supply of beef throughout the year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The ending of the beef variable premium has removed from the support regime an element which included seasonal variation. However, in practice the rate of premium remained fixed at its maximum rate for extended periods which limited its impact. Under the present arrangements the EC Commission has at its disposal measures designed to moderate fluctuations in beef supply. It can release beef from intervention stocks onto the market when supplies are short or introduce aids to private storage to hold beef off the market in times of over supply. We and other member states encourage the Commission to make use of these provisions as appropriate to market circumstances.

French Potato Growers (Payments)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about possible retrospective payments being made to French early potato growers in Brittany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have received no such representations.

Deer (Slaughter)

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a compulsory slaughter scheme for deer suffering from tuberculosis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Only a few herds are believed to be infected with tuberculosis, but in the interests of preventing it becoming established the Government have decided to introduce a compulsory slaughter scheme where this is necessary to control disease in deer kept in farms or parks. Compensation will be paid at 50 per cent. of the value of the slaughtered animal, subject to a ceiling. The necessary order under the Animal Health Act 1981 will be introduced as soon as possible. This measure, together with the steps already announced to make tuberculosis in deer a notifiable disease and to introduce movement controls and marking requirements, represent a major initiative by the Government to deal with the disease. I now hope that rapid progress can be made in devising a deer health scheme in co-operation with the industry.

NUVAN Fish 500 EC

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if a product licence under the Medicines Act 1968 has been issued for NUVAN Fish 500 EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A product licence for Aquagard sea lice treatment (formerly known as NUVAN Fish 500 EC) was granted yesterday. The product licence was granted in accordance with the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968 following a detailed and thorough assessment of data relating to the safety, quality and efficacy of the product. As part of this assessment very careful consideration was given to the safety of the product to the fish, the consumers of treated fish, those operators administering the product and to the environment.

In reaching their decision to grant a product licence for Aquagard sea lice treatment Ministers were advised by the Veterinary Products Committee, an independent committee of experts in human and animal health. In reaching its recommendation, the Veterinary Products Committee took advice from experts in environmental safety.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what transitional help the Government give to those people who lose their benefit entitlement due to taking up a full-time job, and thus find themselves financially worse off than previously.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In most cases, people who decide to accept a full-time job offer should find themselves better-off financially than when they were unemployed. The Department of Employment claimant advisory service helps claimants determine whether particular job offers could prove worthwhile financially. It also provides rapid access family credit facilities for unemployed people with children, so that delays in payment are minimised. People entering lower-paid remunerative work may receive help through the housing benefit and community charge rebate schemes if they are responsible for rent, rates or community charge in Scotland. If they have at least one dependent child they may also be entitled to family credit. Payment of these benefits will continue to be made as long as the qualifying conditions remain satisfied. People on low incomes are also able to claim help with dental, optical and prescription charges, and with the cost of travel to hospital for treatment.

Mr. G. Watterson

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he hopes to hold an inquiry into the claim for industrial disablement benefit made by Mr. G. Watterson of North Park holiday centre, Totnes road, Dartmouth, on 23 June 1986, Ref. INS/5999/8057/4; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements are in hand for fixing a date for an inquiry and Mr. Watterson should be hearing from the appropriate branch in the next ten days.

The Department will be doing all that it can to process the matter smoothly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Order Act 1986

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has issued any guidelines for the use of section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Home Office circular 11/1987 issued on 23 February 1987 gave guidance on those parts of the Public Order Act 1986, including section 39, which came into force on 1 April 1987. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions and in what situations section 39 of the Public Order Act has been used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not recorded by police forces or otherwise available.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) Official Report, 15 March, column 231, exceptional and compelling circumstances which would warrant the Minister deferring removal include (a) a mistake and (b) a misrepresentation of a relevant fact by an immigration officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: As I said in reply to a question by the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 15 March at column 231, the examples given in the guidelines introduced on 3 January are not exclusive but are illustrative of the sort of circumstances which would justify deferment of removal. A right hon. or hon. Member may contact my private office (or, out of working hours, the Home Office duty officer) in any case where he believes that the immigration service has wrongly refused to defer removal on the basis of exceptional and compelling circumstances.

Prisoners (Transfer)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he anticipates making a decision on the application for transfer to a jail in the North of Ireland from prisioner number 851715, John McComb;

(2) when he anticipates making a decision on the application for transfer to a jail in the North of Ireland from prisoner number 463799, Ronald McCartney;

(3) when he anticipates making a decision on the application for transfer to a jail in the North of Ireland from prisoner number B69204, Thomas Quigley;

(4) when he anticipates making a decision on the application for transfer to a jail in the North of Ireland from prisoner number 119034, Paul Holmes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. McCartney's application was answered on 31 May. The applications of Mr. McComb and Mr. Holmes will be answered as soon as possible. To date, there is no outstanding request from Mr. Quigley.

Police Custody (Escapes)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped from police custody before being sentenced in each police authority in the most recent period for which such figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the escape of five prisoners from police custody in Liverpool on the evening of 12 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Merseyside police that at about 5.30 pm on 12 June a police bus left the main Bridewell in Liverpool bound for HM prison Hindley with 14 remand prisoners and a police escort on board. Shortly after leaving the Bridewell, a number of the prisoners, who were in individual cells, made a concerted attempt to force off the roof of the vehicle, and four of them managed to escape through a gap in the roof. Two of the prisoners were recaptured immediately, one was caught later the same day, and the other one is still at large. The chief constable is conducting an investigation into the circumstances of the escape.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, following a further break-out of five prisoners from a police custody van in Liverpool on the evening of 12 June, he will review the regulations for holding and transporting people held in custody; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that the chief constable of Merseyside is conducting an inquiry into the incident and he will consider whether there are any lessons to be learnt for the future.

Chinese Nationals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy for Chinese students in London who feel unable to return to be allowed to remain beyond the expiry of their permit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the entry permits of all Chinese nationals currently in the United Kingdom on the same basis as the Australian Government have done; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will ensure that no Chinese students will be forced to leave the United Kingdom to return to China once their student visa has expired, until condition greatly improve in China; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the present number of Chinese students studying in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: There are between 6,000 and 6,500 Chinese nationals in the United Kingdom who are subject to immigration conditions and of these some 3,500 are studying here. In view of the current situation in China, we shall look sympathetically at applications for leave to remain here by Chinese nationals who do not wish to return to China at the present time. Any Chinese national therefore whose leave to remain here is due to expire soon, or has already expired, and who does not wish to return should write to the Immigration and Nationality Department, Home Office, Lunar House, Croydon CR9 2BY, and if they do not qualify to remain under the immigration rules, they will nevertheless be allowed to stay for a further six months on an exceptional basis. This is, I understand, a somewhat longer period than the Australian authorities have agreed. I am taking steps to have this advice published as widely as possible in the universities and colleges, and in the Chinese community.

Mr. Garcia (Money)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis regarding money taken by Metropolitan Police officers from the home of Mr. Garcia of Stratford, London E15 on 6 February; where the money now is; and why it has not been returned to Mr. Garcia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The investigation of alleged criminal offences is an operational matter and, as such, is the responsibility of the commissioner. My right hon. Friend has no authority to intervene in such matters and it would therefore not be fitting for him to call for a report on Mr. Garcia's case.

Mr. Bahadur Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to his letter to the hon. Member for Bradford, West on 23 March concerning Mr. Bahadur Singh; reference IMP S656383/4(S), when he expects to despatch his explanatory statement to the appellate authorities and to Mr. Singh and his representative.

Mr. Renton: The explanatory statement will be despatched to the appellate authorities very shortly. They will make arrangements for it to be forwarded to the appellant's nominated representative.

ENVIRONMENT

City Grants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) all projects and (b) the companies involved and the amounts they are likely to receive, which have been offered a city grant.

Dog Registration

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the dog registration proposal submitted to him by the Association of District Councils in association with the RSPCA, the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and the National Farmers Union.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Planning Gain

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what directions have been issued by his Department since 1979 with regard to planning gain.

Mr. Chope: My Department's circular 22/83 gives advice to local authorities about the proper scope for "planning gain". That advice is summarised in paragraphs 25-26 of Planning Policy Guidance Note 1, issued in January 1988.

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress had been made in implementing the recommendation in the Services Committee's report, "New Parliamentary Building Phase 2: The Next Steps", HC561, that the Property Services Agency should undertake a feasibility study for the development of the phase 2 site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Since the House approved the report in December, the agency has undertaken a wide-ranging search to identify an architectural practice with the talent and expertise to undertake the development of this highly sensitive and technically difficult site. Following interviews by a panel chaired by Bryan Jefferson, CBE, past president of RIBA and special advisor to the Secretary of State on architectural matters, a short-list of suitable practices submitted fee bids. I am now able to announce that, with the agreement of the New Building Sub-Committee, Michael Hopkins and Partners have been commissioned by the Department to carry out the studies on the Palace Chambers site, Nos. 1 and 2 Bridge street and the proposed subway in accordance with the Committee's recommendations.

I am grateful to the hon. Member and his colleagues on the New Building Sub-Committee for their advice and support in making this recommendation and look forward to a close working relationship between the Department and the Sub-Committee in developing the proposals for the benefit of Parliament.

I hope to be able to report the results of the studies before the end of the year.

Community Charge

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received about the impact of the community charge on the residents of almshouses who currently receive the benefit of mandatory or discretionary rate relief; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 June 1989]: I continue to receive representations on all aspects of the community charge.

Rate relief for almshouses arises because they are used for charitable purposes. With the introduction of the community charge they will no longer be subject to rating. The community charge is a personal liability which is not linked to the status or value of the property occupied by the chargepayer. Protection for people on low incomes, including residents of almshouses, will be provided through rebates of up to 80 per cent. of the community charge plus, where appropriate, an amount included in income support in respect of the remaining 20 per cent.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concering exemption for disabled people from the community charge, also known as the poll tax.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 14 June 1989]: I have received a large number of representations on this subject. People who are severely mentally impaired as defined in schedule 1 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 are already exempt from the community charge. Others will be liable to pay the community charge, as they now are to pay domestic rates if they are rateable occupiers of domestic properties, and, depending upon their income, would be entitled to rebates. Disabled people with limited means receive particular help under the community charge rebates scheme.

Caravan Sites Act 1968

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to seek to amend the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: No. I completed a review of the policy just over two years ago and announced the conclusions on 6 February 1987.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the average number, and (b) the average percentage of the unemployed who have been unemployed for (i) 0-six months, (ii) over six months, (iii) six months to one year, (iv) over one year, (v) one to two years, (vi) over two years, (vii) two to three years, (viii) over three years, (ix) three to four years, (x) over four years, (xi) four to five years, and (xii) over five years, in each year 1979 to 1988 and April 1989.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The information is available from the Library. The table shows, for the United Kingdom, the annual average number of unemployed claimants, and these as a percentage of the total in each duration category requested, for the years 1983 to 1988 and the corresponding information for April 1989. Information for the years 1979 to 1982 is only available at disproportionate cost.

Employment Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the monthly statistics since December 1988 for employment training for each standard GB region showing (a) entrants in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative entrants since the scheme started, (b) a breakdown of entrants which shows how many were male and female, the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disabilities, (c) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in project places at the latest available date, (d) trainees who left the scheme in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative leavers since the scheme started, (e) for all those trainees who have left the scheme how many found work, failed to attend, went on to another course of training or education, completed the course, left for sickness or went back into unemployment and (f) the total number of currently filled places.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Information is only available for the eight Training Agency regions in England and for Scotland and Wales. The figures for entrants to employment training are given in table 1. Figures for entrants showing what proportion are men and women, duration of unemployment prior to joining the programme, ethnic background and whether disabled or having a health problem, are given in table 2. Information about trainees entering work placements is not available. The figures for those on project placements are given in table 3. Figures for the number of people who have joined employment training since September and have now left are currently only available for Great Britain as a whole and are estimated; the figures are given in table 4. Information on the breakdowns requested is not available. Information about the number of filled places is given in table 5.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each of the Training Agency's areas within Greater London, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Glasgow, Sheffield, Birmingham and Solihull, Coventry and Warwickshire, and for each of the latest four three monthly periods available, how many unemployed people have been referred to the following outcomes as a result of their restart interviews and, for each of the outcomes, how many people started or attended them (a) referred to a job, (b) allocated to restart courses, (c) referred to ET, (d) referred to community programme, (e) referred to new job training scheme, (f) referred to jobclubs, (g) referred to EAS, (h) referred to voluntary work/VPP, (i) referred to ERC, (j) referred to a DRO, and (k) referred to a claimant adviser.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the attached table gives the information for the relevant Employment Service areas.

We do not know how many of those interviewed ultimately end up in a job or other opportunity as a result of the Restart interview.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each of the Training Agency's areas within Greater London, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Glasgow, Sheffield, Birmingham and Solihull, Coventry and Warwickshire, what are the monthly statistics for the latest available three months for employment training showing (a) entrants in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative entrants since the scheme started, (b) a breakdown of entrants which shows how many were male and female, the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disabilities, (c) the total number of currently filled places, (d) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered employer based work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in employer placements at the latest available date, (e) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered project based work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in project based placements at the latest available date, (f) trainees who left the scheme in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative leavers since the scheme started, (g) for those trainees who have left the scheme how many found work, failed to attend, went on to another course of training or education, completed the course, left for sickness, or went back into unemployment, (h) for those trainees who have left the scheme how many have obtained a vocational qualification and (i) for those trainees who have left the scheme how many have received a training bonus, giving the average training bonus received.

Mr. Nicholls: The figures for entrants to employment training for each of the last three months are given in table 1. Figures for entrants showing what proportion are men and women, duration of unemployment prior to joining the programme, ethnic background and whether disabled or having a health problem are given in table 2. The number of currently filled places is provided in table 3. Information about trainees entering employer and project placements is not available. The figures for those currently in training on project and employer placements are given in table 4. The numbers of trainees who left the scheme are not available on an area basis. Information on the breakdowns requested and for the number obtaining vocational qualifications is not available. Information on the number of trainees who have left the scheme who have received a training bonus and the average bonus paid is not available.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for Great Britain and each standard training agency region, and for each of the latest four three-monthly periods available, how many unemployed people have been referred to the following outcomes as a result of their restart interviews and, for each of the outcomes, how many people started or attended them: (a) referred to a job, (b) allocated to restart courses, (c) referred to ET, (d) referred to community programme, (e) referred to new job training scheme, (f) referred to jobclubs, (g) referred to an EAS, (h) referred to voluntary work/VPP, (i) referred to ERC, (j) referred to a DRO, and (k) referred to a claimant adviser.

Mr. Lee: The information as requested is not available. However, information for Great Britain and the relevant employment service regions is given on the attached table.

We do not know how many of those interviewed ultimately end up in a job or other opportunity as a result of the Restart interview.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for Great Britain and each standard training agency region, what are the monthly statistics for the latest available three months for employment training showing

(a) entrants in each monthly period, and the cumulative number of entrants since the scheme started, (b) a breakdown of entrants which shows how many were male and female, the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disabilities, (c) the total number of currently filled places, (d) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered employer based work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in employer placements at the latest available date, (e) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered project based work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in project based placements at the latest available date, (f) trainees who left the scheme in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative leavers since the scheme started, (g) for those trainees who have left the scheme how many found work, failed to attend, went on to another course of training or education, completed the course, left for sickness, or went back into unemployment, (h) for those trainees who have left the scheme how many have obtained a vocational qualification and (i) for those trainees who have left the scheme how many have received a training bonus, giving the average training bonus received.

Mr. Nicholls: The figures for entrants to employment training for each of the last three months are given in table 1. Figures for entrants showing what proportion are men and women, duration of unemployment prior to joining the programme, their ethnic background and whether disabled or having a health problem are given in table 2. The total number of currently filled places is provided in table 3. Information about trainees entering work and project placements is not available. The figures for those on project and work placements are given in table 4. Figures for the number of people who have joined employment training since September and have now left are currently only available for Great Britain as a whole and are estimated; the figures are given in table 5. Information on the breakdowns requested and for the number obtaining vocational qualifications is not available. Information on the number of trainees who have left the scheme who have received a training bonus, and the average bonus paid, is not available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Cope: Twenty two applications for development funding have been received by the national training task force who is reviewing these proposals and will forward its recommendations to me. I will announce which TECs have been awarded development funding shortly after.

Small Businesses

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will report what the Government are doing to help small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Government have created an overall economic climate which has helped small firms to flourish and grown. It also supports a wide range of schemes to help new and growing firms gain access to professional advice, to finance and to training. These include the small firms service, the business expansion scheme, the enterprise allowance scheme and the enterprise initiative. In April I announced the extension of the highly successful loan guarantee scheme and I also launched business growth training to help small businesses improve their competitiveness and profits through training.

The Reserve

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent and for what reasons his Department envisages needing to call on the Reserve over the planning period in Cm. 607; and if the Reserve is likely to be needed to provide for capital spending.

Mr. Cope: The Department is likely to call on the Reserve this year to the extent of £580,000 in support of end year flexibility on capital because of slippage.

Major Capital Projects

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent major new capital projects are separately indentified in departmental booklets; what major new capital projects have been undertaken since Cm. 288; and what costs will arise from them (a) in 1989-90 and (b) in future years.

Mr. Cope: Major capital projects are separately indentified in my Department's Supply Estimates published each year. Details of projects costing over £500,000 are contained in table 1 to Votes 1 and 2 and table 2 to vote 4 in "Supply Estimates 1989-90, Class VII Department of Employment", Her Majesty's Treasury March 1989 (231-VII), copies of which are available in the Library.

Community Charge

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the categories of information held by his Department that will be available for use by community charge registration officers.

Mr. Cope: Unemployment benefit offices are required to disclose details of the name and address of any person or their partner, aged 18 or over, to a registration officer for a charging authority. This information may only be disclosed if

(i) at any time between 22 May 1989 and 31 March 1990 a person is in receipt of income support but is not receiving housing benefit; and

(ii) from April 1990 where a person is awarded income support but has not made a claim for community charge benefits.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received a copy of the comparative training of clothing workers in Britain and West Germany by the National Insitute of Economic and Social Research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My Department has received a copy of the National Institute Economic Review (No. 125, May 1989) in which the article "Productivity, Machinery and Skills: Clothing Manufacture in Britain and Germany" appears.

The article points to long standing differences between the training arrangements adopted in Britain and Germany and warrants careful consideration by the industry. In doing so they will be aware of the considerable progress made in recent years, notably through the introduction of two-year YTS and the "Clothing Skill Awards" accredited by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications in 1988.

YTS (Teachers)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many teachers are involved in full-time YTS and in what capacities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There are no statistics on the full-time involvement of teachers in YTS. Scheme staff frequently have teaching qualifications, and teachers are often employed in delivery of off-the-job training.

To promote closer co-operation and understanding between teachers and trainers, the Training Agency has run two successful pilot schemes under which 78 teachers were seconded to YTS managing agents for periods of up to 16 weeks. Consideration is being given to the introduction of a national scheme of short duration secondments.

Rexo (Member's Letter)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why it took from 11 April to 30 May for his Department to decide that a letter from the hon. Member for Bassetlaw regarding redundancy payments at Rexo was the responsibility of the Department of Energy.

Mr. Cope: The hon. Member's letter was received by my Department on 19 April. My Department considered that the issue was the responsibility of the Department of Energy and the letter was forwarded to them on 21 April. Subsequently checks showed that the letter had been lost in transit. Action was taken immediately to despatch a further copy. I apologise for the delay.

Departmental Expenditure Plans

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the change in the expenditure plans for his Department for 1989-90 from the 1988-89 estimated outturn will be (a) in percentage terms and (b) after adjustment for the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Cope: The expenditure plans for my Department for 1989-90 are 2·3 per cent. higher than the 1988-89 estimated outturn. After adjustment for the gross domestic product deflator, the expenditure plans for 1989-90 are £85 million 2·6 per cent. below the 1988-89 estimated outturn.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 154

SESSION 1988–89

6th June—16th June 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
